PREFACE.

THE aim of this book is to present the most essential parts of Webster's International Dictionary in a compact and convenient form, suited to the general reader and especially to the college student. It is the latest and fullest of the abridgments of the International. The series which includes the Primary, Common School, High School and Academic, naturally leads up to the Collegiate.

In the International Dictionary, the solid foundation laid by Noah Webster, and the structure built upon it by such scholars as Gilman, Whitney, Porter and Goodrich, was renovated, enriched and thoroughly modernized by ten years' labor of a large staff under President Porter. From that book the pith and marrow has been drawn, so far as the limits of space permit, by careful exercise of judgment and labor, to make the Collegiate. Its main features, especially in comparison with the original work, are these : —

The Vocabulary is pruned of the less familiar technical terms, and of most of the obsolete or very rare literary words. It retains scientific terms occurring in books for the general reader, and also the words of the Bible, Shakespeare, and the more widely read of the older writers. Each word defined is given its place in the alphabetical order of the column, regard being had in this, as in all other details of arrangement, to convenience and quickness of consultation.

The Etymologies retain the essential quality which has won such high commendation for the International. They give the source, when known, of every word ; the intermediate steps of its derivation, with fullness proportioned to the importance of the word ; and the cognates of the English word in German, Latin, Greek, Sanskrit, and in some instances in other languages, such as Icelandic, Swedish, Irish, etc.

The Pronunciation is indicated by the simple and effective system of respelling which is used in the International. It employs the diacritically marked letters familiar in the schoolbooks of the country. It avoids the use of peculiar letters, or the ordinary letters with a value not commonly given to them in English.

In the Definitions, the language of the International is retained as far as possible. Where condensation was necessary, care has been taken not to sacrifice the lucidity and exactness which have always characterized the work of Webster and his editors. The various definitions of a word are given in the order of their historical development ; this being regarded as at once the most logical and scientific arrangement, and also the most practically serviceable in showing not only the what but the why of the later meanings. Many of the definitions are supplemented by an explication of synonyms, somewhat abbreviated from the larger work.

The Pictorial Illustrations have been selected with great care, many of them from those of the International, in some cases with reduction of size. The aim of these illustrations is not display, but clearer elucidation. They number over eleven hundred, and a system of cross-references increases their value.

Preceding or following the Vocabulary are a number of tables and treatises ; some taken from the International ; some, with large improvement, from the Appendix of the old National Pictorial, — which the Collegiate replaces in the series of abridgments ; while some of the work is entirely new.

The Guide to Pronunciation is slightly abbreviated from that in the International. The treatment of the vowel and consonant sounds is supplemented by a very complete exposition of the mode of uttering the different sounds, made clear by illustrations showing the different positions of the vocal organs.

The Table of Prefixes and Suffixes has been entirely rewritten and enlarged, and will afford a key to the meaning of a great number of simple derivatives omitted in the Vocabulary as a saving of space.

The entire contents of the Appendix, so far as taken from the National Pictorial, have been enlarged and improved. They include a Pronouncing Vocabulary of Scripture, Greek, and Latin Proper Names, with Modern Geographical and Biographical Names (four lists combined in one); a Vocabulary of Rhymes; a list of English Christian Names; Deities and Heroes; Foreign Words and Phrases; Arbitrary Signs, etc.

In the Scotch Glossary, the indication of the pronunciation has been a very arduous task, owing to the almost entire want of any serviceable guide in previous glossaries. It has been necessary to rely largely on oral sources of information, and the difficulty is heightened by the divergence of usage even in the same locality. All available printed authorities have been consulted, and several cultivated Scotch gentlemen have given careful attention to the details of the work.

As a whole, the broad aim of the Collegiate Dictionary has been to retain, both in substance and in form, so much of the ample scholarship of the International as to meet the ordinary wants of the advanced students in schools or colleges; and to offer to the general reader a compact and convenient dictionary, thoroughly trustworthy, and full enough to serve for most of the everyday purposes for which a dictionary is consulted.

As the many-shelved library, the voluminous encyclopedia, and the substantial quarto, has each its necessary place; as at the other extreme a much simpler wordbook is requisite for the child; so there is another distinct need, for an intermediate work condensed, portable, adequate for common use, disencumbered of the more abstruse lore, easy to handle and quick to consult. For this purpose, Webster's Collegiate Dictionary is put forth.

GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION.

§1. KEY TO THE SYMBOLS.

In the RESPELLING FOR PRONUNCIATION in the Dictionary, there is employed — as shown in the Table — a symbol for every clear vowel or diphthongal sound in the language; with, in four instances, a pair of equivalents for the same sound as occurring in different situations, viz.: u̱ = o͝o; u̯ = o͞o; ô = ą; and y̆ (final) = ĭ; besides a and e, italicized, as these vowels are in certain cases obscured and turned toward the neutral form; also, apostrophe for the voice-glide; and N to indicate foreign nasalized vowels; — some of the sounds occurring only in accented and others only in unaccented syllables, and some others, with but slight difference of quality, in both; — the ē is always of the "narrow" form in accented and the "wide" in unaccented syllables. The a̋, e̋, and ő are used to represent the similar sounds in foreign words, but not limited as they are in English to unaccented syllables. The u̱ is employed, as the nearest English vowel we have, to replace u French and ü German; and the e̋ for the eu French and ö German.

The consonant letters b, d, f, h, j, k, l, m, p, r, t, v, w, and y, and the digraphs sh and ng, are used with their ordinary normal value; g, s, z, and ch are each limited to a single sound; n and th are marked for one sound of each and used unmarked for the other. No use is made of c, q, x, or the digraphs ph, gh, dg, and wh. The principal substitutions made with each consonant symbol in the respelling are noted in the Table.

n (the ordinary sound): as in no, none, man, many.
th (sonant): for th, as in then, though, this, smooth, breathe.
th (surd): as in thin, through, worth, width.

NOTE. Foreign consonant sounds are represented by the nearest English equivalents.

REFERENCES. Figures annexed to the respelled form of the words refer to sections in the GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION.

ACCENTS AND HYPHENS. The principal accent is indicated by a heavy mark (′), and the secondary accent by a lighter mark (′), at the end of the syllable. Syllabic division is otherwise indicated by a light hyphen; a heavier hyphen joins the members of compound words.

The Table here appended, together with the preceding Table, furnishes a method of INDICATING PRONUNCIATION WITHOUT RESPELLING, which will serve, except in the case of a comparatively few words. Use is made of it in this GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION.

To each of the symbols here given, the equivalent is added that takes its place in the respelling (thus : ạ = ŏ, etc. ; what = whŏt, etc. ; c = k, etc.). The unmarked letter in a digraph is to be taken as if silent; as in breāk, brĕad, hāil, yiēld, vẹil, etc. Silent e at the end of syllables, as in fate, etc., or in the ed of preterits and participles, as in baked, burned, etc., need not be marked.

The method has diacritical marks applied to all such consonant letters and digraphs as offer especial occasion for their use. In other instances in which they might be employed (z, gh, ti, as in nation, etc.), it is better to dispense with them. The sounds, as described, of x, ph, qu, and wh, unmarked, are what these characters will usually, but not invariably, represent.

STANDARD OF PRONUNCIATION.

§ 2. THE ultimate standard of pronunciation for the English language is the usage that prevails among the best educated portion of the people to whom the language is vernacular ; or, at least, the usage that will be the most generally approved by them. The pronunciation of this class of persons, all over the world, is for the greater part of the words of the language substantially uniform, and distinguished by only comparatively unimportant shades of difference.

There are, however, sundry diversities of importance which affect the pronunciation of many words. Uniformity is to be preferred to diversity; but there is no country or locality the custom of which can claim precedence as the everywhere acknowledged standard by which such differences are to be adjudged. The most approved pronunciation in London and the southeast of England is in some points different from what prevails anywhere else. But, notwithstanding the advantage connected with the metropolitan position, the usage of London and the vicinity is not really the standard for the other parts of Great Britain itself, in the sense of securing actual conformity, or even of being acknowledged as the model which should be followed. Few of the best educated of the American people are disposed to take the usage of London as the standard for their own pronunciation. Thus there is in fact no single absolute and universal standard.

The aim of a pronouncing dictionary should of course be to serve as an exponent of the usage which is the ultimate standard of pronunciation. This is all that the dictionary has to do, except that it should present the reasons, when such exist, which render one pronunciation preferable in itself to another. So far as the dictionary may be known and acknowledged as a faithful interpreter of the actual usage, so far and no further, and in no other sense, can it be appealed to as an authority.

§ 3. The task assumed by a pronouncing dictionary is not easy of achievement.

Supposing no doubt exists as to what is the actual usage to be indicated, even then nothing more than an approximation to exactness can possibly be attained. The sounds which we indicate by the same symbol have in fact only a certain general resemblance in common, and occasionally the actual variations are so considerable, that the symbols need to be especially noted as having only an indeterminate value as exponents of common usage ; — as in the case of ȯ (ȯrb), and of û (ûrn), and ĕ (fĕrn), in this Dictionary (see §§ 87, 113, 139). What we indicate in any case is only a general type of sound. Each element undergoes variation as conjoined with this or that element in a syllable or in a word or phrase : the ū (ūse, tūne, etc., § 131) is a signal instance. Pronunciation modeled after a common standard will vary somewhat in different localities, and somewhat as given by different individuals in the same community, and even as given by the same person at different times. Differences in stress, quantity, and pitch have effect upon orthoëpical quality. — See §§ 36-44.

The means of indication at command for a pronouncing dictionary are unavoidably imperfect. It is impossible, in the case of some of our vowel sounds, to select for an example any word not subject to such diversity of pronunciation as to render it unfit to serve the purpose in other than a most imperfect manner. Yet this is and must be the chief means of indication to be employed.

This inadequacy is a cogent reason, in addition to others, for identifying the sounds by the positions and motions of the organs. But this method also is imperfect, since the organs as employed in speaking are, for the most part, out of sight, and have to be observed through the tactual or the muscular senses ; and allowance must be made for differences in the shape and structure of the organs in different persons, and for the somewhat different ways in which sounds nearly or essentially the same may possibly be produced.

The best attainable result is to be gained by employing the different methods that are available, and making one supplement the others.

§ 4. In preparing the revised editions of Webster's Dictionary issued in 1847 and in 1864, the words in the vocabulary were marked in accordance with what was, after thorough investigation, believed to be the pronunciation most generally approved by well-educated people in America; and in this dictionary the pronunciation as given in 1864 is retained, except when decisive reasons for a change have become apparent. In many cases of difference between American and English usage, or of divided usage in America or in England, references have been made to the Guide to Pronunciation; and in some cases of divided and unsettled usage, the word in the vocabulary is supplied with alternative forms. The plan of respelling for pronunciation is adopted in this revision, as preferable on the whole to the former plan of diacritical marks without respelling; and the unaccented syllables are marked, as well as the accented, instead of being left to the guidance of general rules.

SYSTEM OF ENGLISH VOWEL SOUNDS.

NOTE. — The System of the Vowels which is here presented has for its basis the manner of their formation by the organs; and agrees, in its general features and the main part of the nomenclature, with that advanced by Alexander Melville Bell and the same as modified by Henry Sweet; though differing from both in some points of considerable importance. A synopsis of the scheme is presented in the Diagram at the foot of the next following page.

§ 5. VOWEL SOUND, whether uttered with tone as in speaking aloud or merely whispered, has its source in the glottis, that is, the vocal cords, or vocal ligaments, with the narrow opening between them, in the upper part of the larynx (see Fig. 1). The vocal ligaments, with their membranous covering, serve to produce tone in speaking and singing, in just the way the lips do in blowing a horn or trumpet. Whispered vowel sound is made by friction of the breath against the vocal cords or the arytenoid cartilages, which are not then drawn close together as they are for tone vibration; and there is also, in most if not in all cases, some sound produced by friction in the passage through the mouth.

The sound thus originated is variously modified by resonance in the oral cavity; which is molded to different forms by different adjustments of the flexible and movable parts of the mouth, namely, the tongue, soft palate, jaw, lips, cheeks, and the walls of the pharynx; and hence arise the qualities by which vowels are distinguished one from another. The nasal vowels, as in French, add a resonance in the nasal passage, but a nasal tone is always a blemish in English speech, except in the proper nasal consonants, n, m, ng (§ 167).

In speaking aloud or in singing, the voice may be pitched higher or lower at pleasure, carrying with it all the while for any individual vowel the characteristic quality imparted by resonance from the suitably adjusted oral cavity; and the whispered vowel has the tone proper to the cavity as adjusted for that vowel, that serves, in the one way or the other, to produce the characteristic quality.

§ 6. Every part of the passage from the larynx at one end to the outer edge of the lips at the other will more or less modify the sound; but for any one vowel, only a certain portion is instrumental in giving the characteristic quality by which it is individually recognized. This part, as thus employed and adjusted, may be called the VOWEL-CHAMBER for that vowel; through its action as a resonance chamber, the vowel quality comes into being. In the formation of a vowel-chamber, there is in every instance a PLACE OF CONSTRICTION made by a more or less close approximation of some part of the tongue to the hard palate, or the soft palate, or the pharyngeal wall; on each side there is actual contact, leaving a passage through in the middle; for some vowels the lips are contracted, making a superadded place of constriction. The vowel-chamber consists of the passage at the place of constriction within the mouth, and together with this, in most cases, the cavity, or compartment, before or behind this place, — unless both the one before and the one behind be included. To make the vowel-chamber complete for a clear vowel sound, the lateral margins of the tongue are firmly applied all along to the sides of the pharynx and soft palate, or also still further on to the borders of the hard palate; and for the labial vowels the walls of the chamber are formed in part by the cheeks and lips. A tense condition of the soft parts of the walls is requisite for the resonance that is essential to the production of a vowel sound.

The position of the lower jaw is important, though in a subordinate and secondary sense, through its connection with the organs directly concerned. Thus, when depressed, it carries with it the under lip and lower teeth, stretches the cheeks, and allows of tongue configurations and positions otherwise difficult or impossible. The position of the lower jaw may affect indirectly that of the larynx, and even that of the soft palate.

§ 7. The character of the resonance proper to any cavity, and thus to any particular vowel-chamber, will depend on the size and shape of the cavity together with the nature and condition of the material of the inclosing walls. The term RESONANCE, as descriptive of the means by which vowel quality is imparted, needs to be taken, as implying, besides simple resonance in the vowel chamber, the modifying effects produced as the current of vocal breath strikes upon or rubs against the walls of the oral passage. Some of them will be really fricative, even in vocal speech, and thus similar in kind to such as characterize certain of the consonants.

Some vowels are taken more easily at a low and others at a high pitch. But this is due mainly, if not wholly, to the connection, by muscle and ligament, between the larynx and the root of the tongue; in consequence of which certain positions of the tongue favor the adjustment of the larynx for a higher and others for a lower pitch.

§ 8. For the vowel ä (ärm, äh), — with its "wide" variant å (åsk, påss, §§ 13, 61), — the constriction is made by approximating the extreme back part of the tongue to the back wall of the pharynx; the place is thus very near to the larynx and the root of the tongue (see Fig. 1). Above this place, the vowel-chamber curves forward and opens gradually between the tongue on the one hand and the pharyngeal wall and soft palate on the other. It reaches no further forward than the front limit of the soft palate: the vowel gets its essential quality in the space thus bounded.

This may properly be denominated the OPEN-THROAT VOWEL, since it is formed in the throat and the parts adjacent, and with the throat in the upper or forward part quite open, neither obstructed nor constricted, so that the sound is reflected and thrown forward, directly and without hindrance, from the pharyngeal wall. By the throat is here meant the fauces, — the passage that runs from the mouth to the œsophagus and the larynx. — See §§ 12, 15, 57–69.

§ 9. For the two groups (§§ 10, 11) next to be mentioned, the constriction is made by approximation of the tongue to the hard palate in the one case, and to the soft palate in the other, — this in each case dividing the oral passage into two compartments, one of which, however, with the constricted channel, may properly be regarded as the vowel-chamber, because it contributes so much more than the other to the quality of the vowel.

§ 10. When the constriction is made by arching up the tongue under the hard palate, we have the tripartite series, namely, ē (ēve), ā (āle), and â (câre), each member of which has also its "wide" variant (§ 13). These are denominated FRONT VOWELS, and otherwise are often called palatal vowels.

The three members of the series are distinguished as HIGH (ē), MID (ā, without the "vanish"), and LOW (â, without the glide to r). The change from ē to ā, and again from ā to â, is made by lowering the parts of the tongue before and in the front, and behind and at the hinder end, of the place of constriction, which is thus made shorter; the channel of the vowel-chamber at the place of constriction is at the same time made broader from side to side; in each case the passage may be as close as it can be without consonantal friction. — See Fig. 2.

For the high, ē (ēve), the root of the tongue is drawn forward; also, the surface of the tongue back of the place of constriction and down toward the root is quite concave from side to side, and up and down as well; it becomes less and less so for the mid and the low, falling back with a more and more even slope; the arch of the soft palate is at the same time more and more flattened, and the lower jaw is of necessity more and more depressed, and is also drawn back; if it be not so drawn back, the soft palate will be dragged forward by the tongue, and thus a nasal twang will be inevitable.

The passage at the place of constriction and the larger compartment behind the same are two distinct resonant cavities, each having as such a pitch proper to itself. In passing from the low, â (câre), to the high, ē (ēve), the pitch of the forward portion rises; while, conversely, that of the cavity behind it becomes at the same time deeper.

For the front vowels in detail, see §§ 43–56, 75–84, 102–104.

§ 11. When the constriction is at the soft palate, involving retraction and humping up of the tongue, we have another series of three, with their "wide" variants (§ 13), denominated BACK VOWELS, namely, o͞o (fo͞od) HIGH, o͝o (o͝old, without the usual "vanish") MID, and ą (ąll) LOW, — differenced as the tongue is swelled up higher or less high in the back part of the mouth, and thus reaches to a higher or lower — or, what is the same thing, a more or less forward — point along the soft palate. Thus, in the back as well as the front vowels, the place of constriction is longest for the high, shorter for the mid, and still shorter for the low, — shortened at the forward or upper end of the place for the back vowels, as it is at the rearward end for the front vowels. The broadening of the vowel-chamber, the flattening of the arch of the soft palate, and the lowering of the jaw, in the change from high to mid and from mid to low, occur in the back as well as in the front vowels. The more and more gradual and regular, and longer and longer, slope of the surface of the tongue backwards in the front series, is paralleled, inversely, by a similar change forwards in the back series. The extreme retraction of the fore part of the tongue for the high-back, o͞o (fo͞od), corresponds to the drawing forward of the root and hinder part of the tongue for the high-front, ē (ēve). — See Figs. 2, 4.

To all of the back vowels a labial modification is indispensable, and they are thus of the class termed LABIAL, or ROUNDED, vowels. The high are more rounded, that is, have the lips more contracted, than the mid, and the mid more than the low. The vowel-chamber for all of the back vowels has its forward limit made by the lips, and takes in at the other extremity the place of constriction on the soft palate, the compartment below this place contributing but a comparatively unimportant part.

The greater contraction and protrusion of the lips, and the greater retraction of the tongue and consequent greater dimensions of the cavity, — the depth of which is also increased by the elevation of the soft palate, — cause the high position for the back vowels to give a deeper resonance than the mid, and the mid than the low: there is thus presented a correspondence in this respect with the back cavity of the front vowels.

For these vowels in detail, see §§ 70, 74, 108–122, 126–128, 136–138.

§ 12. In both the front and the back series (§§ 10, 11) the change of organic position from that of the open-throat vowel, ä (ärm), å (åsk, § 8), is least for the low, and greatest for the high; this vowel being nearly related to the low in both series. It is thus properly to be regarded as the common extremity, or point of departure, for the two series, which proceed from it by a regular gradation, as is represented in the Diagram, below.

§ 13. Each of these vowels (§§ 8, 10, 11) has a variant denominated WIDE, as distinguished from the above described, the NARROW.* We have ä (ärm) narrow, å (åsk) wide; â (câre) narrow, ă (ăm, căt) wide; ā (āle, without the "vanish") narrow, ĕ (ĕnd, pĕt) wide; ē (ēve) narrow, ĭ (ĭll, pĭt) wide; and ą (ąll) narrow, ŏ (ŏdd) or ạ (whạt) wide; o͝o (o͝old) narrow, o͞o (fo͞od) narrow, o͝o (fo͝ot) wide. The place of constriction is widened out by increase of distance between the tongue and the palate or the pharyngeal wall, not only by drawing away the entire body of the tongue, but by reducing the convexity across the surface, that is, by letting down the tongue toward the position it takes when in repose. For the narrow, the

* The narrow, so termed by Mr. Sweet and others, were called the primary by Mr. Bell.

DIAGRAM OF THE SIMPLE VOWEL SOUNDS IN ENGLISH.

The Diagram exhibits the arrangement of the vowels in the System and represents their relations, as explained in these pages; giving also their descriptive names. — See § 25.

The ā (āle) and o͝o (o͝old) are here to be taken as meaning only the radical part without the usual "vanish" (§ 18); and the â (câre) as apart from the "glide" to the r. For the back vowels, except the back-mixed, the term "round" (§ 11) is commonly added as part of the name. Thus, ą (ąll) is the low-back-narrow-round vowel.

tongue is pressed with some force toward the palate or pharyngeal wall, making contact and meeting resistance on the lateral margins, and being thus firmly braced in position. For the wide, this pressure is not exerted, and this support is wanting; the tongue is merely projected into position, and leans upon nothing, or only spreads itself against the teeth or other parts on each side, and finds but slight support — hence the commonly abrupt character and naturally short quantity of the wide. — See § 21.

The changes in the form and position of the tongue, from the narrow to the wide, carry with them corresponding changes in the position of the lower jaw.

All the front vowels are converted from narrow to wide in the way shown for â (câre), in Fig. 3; and all the back vowels, as shown for o͝o (fo͝od), in Fig. 5.

§ 14. The narrow and the wide may, in a given case, be regarded either as different vowels or as different forms of the same vowel, but are commonly spoken of as different vowels. The two of each pair are perceived as characterized by the same fundamental quality, and as differentiated by features common to all the wide and the opposite appertaining to all the narrow.

§ 15. There are intermediate degrees of narrow and wide which need to be noticed (§§ 23, 48); and there are forms of forcible tongue pressure away from the palate, making vowels still more open than what we call the wide, and with prolonged quantity, as heard in certain provincial and rustic modes of speech (see § 50). There are also various shades of sound between the high and mid, and between the mid and low. And every vowel is subject to variations in position and in sound as con-

[The Thyroid Cartilage extends back in two broad plates, one on each side; each one hinged, or pivoted, at a point on the outside and near the bottom of the Cricoid. The Thyroid thus serves as a lever for stretching or relaxing the Vocal Cords. The Tongue Bone extends back in two branches above the Thyroid plates. Each Arytenoid is a pyramid with a triangular base, of which the outer angle (not seen in the engraving) rests upon the Cricoid, while the inner front angle holds the end of a Vocal Ligament, and the inner angle in the rear is held fast by a short ligament to the Cricoid. The Arytenoids serve as levers for moving and adjusting the Vocal Cords. When the Cords are brought close together, the passage between the Cartilages may either remain open or be closed: closed by the joining, and opened by the disjoining, of their front edges, from the bottom to the top, — the Transverse Muscle barring the way behind at all times. The False Vocal Cords have no direct agency in phonation.]

joined with different consonants. In a vowel scheme for ordinary uses, only the more prominent and plainly distinguishable diversities are to be marked, and the fixed points on the scale are to be taken with some latitude of variation.

In the case of the open-throat or pharyngeal vowels, of which we have noted a narrow, ä (ärm), and a wide, å (åsk), a nicer analysis might give as many varieties, though not so strongly marked, as we have in the other groups, that is to say, a high, a mid, and a low, and of each of these a narrow and a wide. But, for ordinary orthoëpical purposes, such a minute subdivision is unnecessary. The å (åsk) will ordinarily be higher, as well as wider, than the ä (ärm). — See § 59.

§ 16. (a) There is a fourth order of vowels in addition to the three above described (§§ 8, 10, 11), though it would not be altogether amiss to regard it as a variety running through the other three. To this the term MIXED is applied in the Bell nomenclature. It comprises, in the English, û (ûrn), ŭ (ŭp), and ē (fērn, evēr). Sounds of this order occur also in the first part of the glide between the initial and the final elements of the long ī and ou diphthongs (§ 19 a); and make the glide between any vowel not of the mixed order and a following r, to which consonant the mixed vowels themselves bear a close resemblance. Unaccented vowels tend, for the most part, to a sound of this sort, when they do not go over to the neutral vowel. — See §§ 17, 38, 39, 85–95, 105, 123, 124, 139–142.

These are called "mixed" because regarded as formed by a kind of blending of the organic positions for the front and the back vowels, or a neutrality between them. Though the term, as thus understood, is not wholly inappropriate, the more essential characteristic of this class is that the passage at the place of constriction — which in this case is both longer and much more open than it is for the other vowels — has the part of the tongue along the middle line depressed and the lateral borders raised, so as to form a sort of cylindrical channel, instead of a passage with a somewhat crescent-shaped cross section, concave on the palate and convex on the tongue, as for other vowels. This passage may be regarded as constituting the entire vowel-chamber.

(b) The vowels of this class may properly be subdivided into FRONT and BACK, and under each may be distinguished a HIGH, a MID, and a LOW; also, under each of these, a NARROW and a WIDE. The front-mixed are made mainly under the hard palate, and the back-mixed mainly under the soft palate. For the high of each the vowel-chamber reaches well forward, and in the change from high to mid, and again from mid to low, falls back somewhat in place, and is made larger in dimension. The English û (ûrn), narrow, and ŭ (ŭp), wide, are mid-back-mixed; ē (fērn), narrow, and e (evēr), wide, are mid-front-mixed. The high-front-mixed,— which, labially rounded, make the u French and ü German, — we have in English as the brief initial element of ū (ūse, § 132).

The high-front-mixed, just above described, are closely related to the high-front vowels, ē (ēve, § 10) and ĭ (ĭll); the mid, ē (fērn, evēr), to the mid-front, ā (āle), and ĕ (ĕnd); a variant pronunciation in fern, earn, etc., low instead of mid, — more common formerly than at present, — is nearly related to the low-front, å (cåre). The mid-back-mixed, û (ûrn), ŭ (ŭp), have a similar relation to the mid-back, ō (ōld), and ŏ (ŏbey).

The û (ûrn) and ē (fērn) are distinguished as narrow, from ŭ (ŭp), e (evēr), wide. They are marked as such by the essential characteristics of the narrow and wide of the other groups (§§ 13, 21); only in this case we have for the wide a concavity made less deep, instead of a convexity flattened down, and we have the bracing action for the narrow made by a pull downward on the middle line and a firm pressure at the sides.

(c) The rounding of the tongue in these vowels produces an effect to the ear somewhat like that of lip-rounding. Tongue-rounding and lip-rounding are combined in the French eu and u, German ö and ü. The term tongue-rounded would in fact describe the whole class more accurately than mixed. It is to be noticed that the lip-rounding takes a characteristically different shape in the mixed from what it does in the back vowels. There is some degree of lip-rounding in ū (ūse), and even a slight degree in ē (fērn).

(d) The mixed vowels are closely allied to the consonant r, into which they are converted by raising the point of the tongue toward the palate (see § 250). Hence, they form the glide connecting r with vowels preceding. The mid-mixed ē (fērn, evēr) is more nearly allied to the dental r (§ 251), and the low-mixed to the palatal (§ 252). It is through the influence of the following r that the present sound of ē in fērn, hēr, etc., and of ī in fīr, sīr, etc., has been developed from the original sounds of ĕ (ĕnd) or ā (āle), and ĭ (ĭll) or ē (ēve).

§ 17. The English vowels of the mixed (§ 16) class are the nearest to the obscure sound of the so-called NEUTRAL VOWEL, otherwise named the natural vowel,—that is, the vocal sound produced with the least articulative effort, or with none at all, and heard, except as a glide, only in unaccented syllables. The neutral vowel differs from the mixed vowels in being made without the concave configuration of the tongue, and with a less tense condition of the organs. It admits of considerable variety of tongue position. Every short vowel is liable in very rapid speech — though some more than others — to fall into it (see §§ 38, 39). We have it also in the voice-glide (§ 95), the glide (§ 161) from vocal consonant to vowel, and the glide within diphthongs (§ 19 a).

§ 18. The nineteen sounds (see Diagram) as above described, aside from the neutral vowel, but inclusive of the initial element in ū (ūse, §§ 19 b, 132), make up the complete list of the SIMPLE VOWEL SOUNDS, or of what need to be noted as such (§ 15) in English. The ī (īce, § 100) and the ū (ūse, § 132) are diphthongs. Also, ā (āle, § 45), with the usual vanish in ĭ (ĭll), and ō (ōld, § 109), with the vanish in o͝o (fo͝ot), are diphthongs.

§ 19 (a). The PURE DIPHTHONGS in English are made up as follows: — (1) The ī (īce, § 100) consists mainly of the glide between the initial and the final element, no one part having predominance. It begins with å (åsk, § 61), or a sound nearer to ŭ (ŭp, § 141), and proceeds through sounds of the mixed order (§ 16), followed by those of the neutral vowel, on to the final element ĭ (ĭll, § 103). As usually pronounced, it differs somewhat from the word aye (yea): this begins with ä (ärm, § 57), and also gives more prominence to the initial element and somewhat more to the final, and less to the connecting glide. (2) The ou (out, § 129) is like ī (īce, §§ 99, 100) in having no part predominant; also, in beginning with the same element; it then takes a different direction, through sounds of the mixed and the neutral order, with gradually increased labial rounding, and terminates in o͝o (fo͝ot, § 128). (3) The oi (oil, § 129) begins with ą (ąll, § 70), or a sound between this and ŏ (ŏdd, § 118), taking it for the main part, and glides on to ĭ (ĭll, § 103). Both (4) ā (āle, § 45) and (5) ō (ōld, § 109) with the usual vanish, give much the greater prominence to the initial element. (6) The ū after certain consonants — as in lūte, jū'ry, sūit, dūke, tūne, etc. (see § 134) — begins with the high-front mixed vowel allied to ĭ (ĭll, § 16 b), and without taking the y sound, glides on to o͝o (fo͝od, § 127), and has that for the main part.

(b) The following, as taking a semivowel y or w sound within the glide, are IMPURE DIPHTHONGS: — (1) The ū (ūse, pūre, § 132), or ew in few, etc., differs from the ū in lūte, etc. — the pure diphthong No. 6 above, — by interposing the y sound as part of the glide between the initial and the final elements. (2) There are several impure diphthongs that begin with a brief ĭ (ĭll) and run through y to different endings; as the ea in malleable — when pronounced măl'lyȧ-b'l (§ 97) — the eou in nauseous, the eu in grandeur (§ 97); the ia in cordial, filial, familiarity, iou in bilious, iu in genius, io in minion (§ 106); also, ya in yarn, you in young, yo in yore, and yaw in yawl, when uttered, as is commonly done, with a brief initial i sound (§ 272). (3) The other kind of impure diphthong begins with a brief o͝o (fo͝ot, § 128) sound and glides through a more or less complete consonant w on to the final vowel sound; as in quail, quite, quality, guano, swim, swan, swell, when, etc.; and may be heard even in warn, wish, well, woe, we, as usually pronounced (§ 266).

(c) Of the pure diphthongs, it is to be noticed that they all proceed from a place of constriction further back in the mouth to one more forward, or from a low to a high vowel, — that is, from a more open to a more close palato-lingual position; or else, as the ū in lūte, etc., No. 6, in § 19 (a), from a more open to a more close lip configuration. The impure diphthongs with y for the connecting glide proceed in a backward direction from their high-front starting point; and those with the w glide proceed from a more close to a more open lip configuration: the consonant glides in these cases are generated by the relaxation from vowel tension that takes place in passing from close to open.

(d) The vowelized r (§ 253), when this form is used, — as in far, ear, ire, more, worm, earth, etc., — is usually a sound of the mixed (§ 16) class; and may either be added to the preceding vowel as a separate sound, or may in conjunction with it make a diphthong of a peculiar kind.

§ 20. The terms OPEN and CLOSE may be applied to describe either the difference of low, mid, and high, or that of narrow and wide, — or that between the open-throat vowel and any or all of the others. They are thus wanting in exactness. It is impossible to arrange all the vowels on a single linear scale, or even on two single lines, as more or less open and close. We can say, however, of the ä (ärm) that it is the most open of all.

§ 21. Among the vowels as narrow and wide (§ 13), there are certain important relations as concerns LONG AND SHORT QUANTITY. Some are naturally long, and can not be shortened beyond a certain limit without a change of quality. Others are naturally short, and can be prolonged only by a special effort. All the wide are naturally short, and the narrow naturally long, because of the fixed, braced position of the tongue in the latter case and the opposite in the former (§ 13). Also, the wide require a greater expenditure of vocalized breath to produce the proper resonance in the wider passage, and hence are not so easily prolonged. The narrow long vowels, when shortened, verge toward the wide; the shorter wide, when lengthened, tend to the narrow, or may turn to a still wider, or rather a more open, form. — See §§ 15, 30, 37.

§ 22. The sounds symbolized by ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, as being the most frequent of the long sounds denoted by these letters, are called their REGULAR LONG sounds; and, for the like reason, ă, ĕ, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ, their REGULAR SHORT sounds. The regular long and short of the same letter are at present, however, in no case variants of each other, as narrow and wide, or as the long and short of the same sound.

§ 23. The regular short vowels ă, ĕ, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ, pronounced in the proper English way, are a marked peculiarity of the language. The vowel sounds that, in the other languages of Europe, come nearest to any of these are, for the most part, considerably less wide. The foreign variation is also habitual with the people of Scotland.

§ 24. All the regular long vowels, as also all the diphthongs, may form the closing element of an accented syllable (as dāy, ē'vil, lī'ar, etc.), while the regular short vowels naturally have the syllable closed by a consonant sound (as ăt'om, cŏp'y, cĭt'y, etc.); though such words as con-dĭ'tion, nă'tion-al, etc., cannot well be so divided in writing and print. Even as unaccented, four of these, namely, ă, ĕ, ŏ, ŭ, are commonly joined to a following consonant.

§ 25. The relations of the vowels, as respects organic formation, — carrying with them also corresponding acoustic relations, — are represented in the Diagram on p. ix. The neutral vowel, as having no fixed place of articulation, is not included in the scheme.

ACCENT, QUANTITY, AND EMPHASIS, AND THEIR RELATIONS TO THE QUALITY OF VOWEL SOUNDS.

§ 26. ACCENT, in the wider sense, may be defined as the prominence given, or the act of giving prominence, by whatever means, to one syllable over others in a word or in a phrase, when not bestowed in the way of emphasis. Or it may be defined as a mode of utterance that gives such prominence. The accent is an essential part of the form of a word; and sometimes makes the only difference in form between two words that have totally different meanings; as, in'cense and in-cense'; con'tract, n., and con-tract', v.

EMPHASIS has a general resemblance to accent in the means it employs; but, instead of being fixed by habitual usage, it varies with occasions: it has for its office to make prominent and impress, and oftentimes to color and modify, and to suffuse with emotion, the idea or meaning conveyed. It usually falls on whole words or groups of words, — though sometimes on significant parts of a word, such as the prefixes un-, dis-, etc. In the latter case, accent will give way to emphasis; as it obviously may do in the case of a phrase. For the purpose here in view, it is a matter of indifference whether what we have in any instance be accent or emphasis.

§ 27. A PHRASE AS SUBJECT TO ACCENT is one consisting, either wholly or in part, of monosyllabic words, among which the prepositions, conjunctions, pronouns, the articles, and verb auxiliaries predominate. The more unimportant members fall naturally, and thus habitually, into less prominence in expression. Both phrase and word accent bear an important part in the rhythm of verse.

§ 28. Accent, in the general sense, may be effected by greater stress, or by longer quantity, or by a distinction of pitch, in the accented syllable, — or by any two or by all of these combined. Accent, in a more special sense, may signify that — whether stress, quantity, or pitch — by which the syllabic prominence is effected. Accent, considered as made by stress alone, — or, it may be, by pitch, — is quite commonly thus contradistinguished from quantity; — see § 33.

§ 29. PITCH — that is, modification of voice as high or low on the musical scale — is not a recognized element in English accentuation, as it has been and is in that of some languages, — notably in the ancient Greek. Yet even in English, in the speech of some persons, and in some dialects, it appears as such in a noticeable degree.

§ 30. QUANTITY means the length of time occupied in uttering either a syllable or an alphabetic element. Vowels are distinguished as intrinsically, or naturally, long or short (§ 21), according as they can or can not be easily prolonged, and as they do or do not resist being made short; consonants also are distinguished as continuous and as momentary (§ 176); syllables, of course, take character from their components. As applied to the syllables in an English word or phrase, quantity may ordinarily best be understood as not necessarily signifying any intrinsic quality in the vowel of the syllable: a relatively long syllable may be made by prolongation of the vowel or the consonant elements, or of both; or may be made such virtually and in effect by a pause, or rest, at the end.

§ 31. STRESS — in speech — means force of utterance. This force is resolvable, in the last analysis, into muscular tension, — tension, be it observed, not merely of the muscles that drive the air from the lungs, but of those which stretch and stiffen the vocal cords for tone vibration, and of those which hold the mouth organs in the various positions and configurations for vowel resonance, and move or hold them for the consonant articulations. We thus have reaction against, as well as direct propulsive action upon, the vocal current. And much of this reaction goes to impress upon the sound certain modifications with greater distinctness and effectiveness. Thus, the prominence given by accentual stress is not merely due to greater loudness, or intensity, of sound; but sometimes as much, if not more, to the fuller distinctness of the articulation.

§ 32. Stress in utterance is a thing of degree, and is entirely relative. The nearest to an absolute determination is found in the least stress with which a syllable can be uttered and yet be perceived as a syllable. Above this least degree in one syllable or more, other degrees may exist in other syllables of the same word, and thus form a ground for distinguishing a primary, a secondary, or even a tertiary accent.

§ 33. In English, stress is the chief, and is commonly regarded as the sole, constituent of accent. Yet, quantity is ordinarily combined with stress: that is to say, syllables that take the least degree of stress commonly take the shortest quantity; — and quantity, in its turn, carries stress along with it. The two things are separable; but, in English, the two are ordinarily combined. — See § 30.

§ 34. The syllable or syllables that, in a word or phrase, may be uttered with the absolutely least stress and quantity — or with a near approach to this quite least degree — are said to be UNACCENTED. The one syllable which takes the relatively greatest stress and prolongation is, of course, an ACCENTED syllable. In many words of several syllables — usually of more than three — there is occasion to note two accents, a stronger and a weaker, denominated a PRIMARY and a SECONDARY accent, distinguished in this Dictionary by a heavier and a lighter accentual mark; as, e. g., mag′ni-fi′er, af′fa-bil′i-ty. There is, in many three-syllable words, such a secondary accent. It may fall on the first syllable; as in un′der-take′, con′tra-dict′; in which case it is usually marked in dictionaries. Or it may fall on the third and final syllable; as in mag′ni-fy; the final syllable of this word having equal stress with the third in mag′ni-fi′er, and thus differing from the third in van′i-ty; and as in the verb proph′e-sy, which differs from the noun proph′e-cy: in such cases it is not the custom to insert the accent mark; in this Dictionary, when the vowel of the syllable is long, the secondary accent is implied by the mark of long quantity; as, mag′ni-fȳ, ded′i-cāte, tur′pen-tīne.

There are, also, words of two syllables, neither of which can be properly spoken with the absolutely least stress and least quantity; such as a-men, fare-well, conquest, horse-rake, house-wife, contest; including most of the two-syllable compounds, and many words not of that class. In the case of amen and a number of two-syllable compounds the two accent marks are given in this book.

There are no principles by which to determine the accent in English; and in many cases some variation from the more customary form will pass unnoticed. The general tendency of the language is to carry the chief accent back towards or to the first syllable.

§ 35. Degrees and shades of accentual stress and quantity, besides the two which we mark as primary and secondary, are not indicated in this Dictionary.

§ 36. Differences of accent will have effect in MODIFYING OR CHANGING THE QUALITY of articulate elements. Certain of the elements require a considerable degree of articulative stress and some extent of time for their clear enunciation; while others are compatible with a more relaxed, or less tense, condition of the organs, and with a quicker deliverance of the sound. It is, however, the quantity, and not the stress, that directly affects the quality. — See §§ 30, 33.

§ 37. All the naturally LONG VOWELS (§ 21) and the DIPHTHONGS are under accentual stress, either primary or secondary (though indicated in the Dictionary, it may be, sometimes only by the vowel quantity): they can not suffer weakening or loss of accent without alteration of quality. Thus, ĕ (ĕ-vent′, § 78) differs in quality from ē (ēve); ĭ (ĭ-de′a, § 101) from ī (īce); although, as thus weakened, these do not come down to the absolutely least accent; — see §§ 21, 42. The ā in sen′āte is nearly as wide as the ĕ in bon′nĕt. The second ē in ce′rēs′, when it turns to ĕ in ce′rĕ-al, is hardly distinguishable from the quite wide ĭ in se′rĭ-al. The narrow ô of in-fôrm′ becomes the wide ŏ in in′fŏr-ma′tion; the narrow ō (ōld) in ĭm-pōse′, the wide ŏ (ŏ-bey′) in im′pŏ-si′tion. — See § 15 and the Diagram. A diphthong, when deprived of accent, is necessarily curtailed, — either preserving the middle portion (§ 19), or the middle and terminal element (§ 101), or the terminal.

§ 38. Among the naturally SHORT VOWELS (§ 21), the high-front-wide ĭ (pĭt, § 104) undergoes but slight alteration as deprived of accent. The mid-front-wide ĕ (ĕnd, § 83) with least accent tends to ĭ (ĭll); when it remains but slightly modified, it does not sink to the degree of least accent. The low-front-wide ă (ăm, § 56) may change to ȧ (ȧsk) and then fall into the neutral vowel; but ă can not itself gradually pass into an obscure vowel sound. It is apt to change into ĕ: thus ăccept and ĕxcept are not distinguished by the illiterate.

§ 39. In the other naturally short vowels, there is a general tendency, on the remission of accent, to fall towards or sink into the neutral-vowel sound (§ 17), a sound which is taken only by syllables with the least accent. The letter o in final syllables with the least accent, as in fel′on, at′om, big′ot, act′or, etc. (§ 124), may be regarded as first taking a u sound as in sŏn, or a sound of that class, whence it often passes over to the obscure neutral sound.

§ 40. The TENDENCIES, on the remission of accent, may be SUMMED UP as follows: — The narrow long vowels tend to the wide form; — see §§ 21, 37, and the Diagram, p. ix. Of the wide short vowels, those at the three extremes of the scales, namely, ȧ (ȧsk), o͝o (fo͝ot), and ĭ (ĭll), and also the mixed ŭ (ŭp), have their quality but slightly changed by loss of accent; — ĕ (ĕnd) and ă (ăm), of the front group, tend in the forward direction, though ă (ăm) has equal proclivity toward ȧ (ȧsk) or ŭ (ŭp) and thus to the neutral vowel; — for all the wide back vowels, namely, ŏ (ŏdd), ô (ôbey), ụ (fụll), or o͝o (fo͝ot), the tendency is to the neutral form; into which, indeed, every short vowel will sometimes fall. In general, the narrow and long, when shortened and widened, may then further, in very rapid speech, take the course of the wide short vowels, as indicated above. — See § 48.

In hurried and careless colloquial speech, these modifying and obscuring tendencies, in both word and phrase, are intensified.

§ 41. These tendencies take the REVERSE DIRECTION when, instead of accent remitted or weakened, we have the quantity of a vowel, or both the stress and quantity, increased. In all cases of quite deliberate speech we have increased quantity and stress upon both unaccented and accented syllables; while yet their relations to each other as such remain unchanged. The ordinarily obscured vowels of unaccented syllables are then and thus made to take some clear vowel sound. It is often a nice point to determine what the sound is that is thus to be taken. It will not, for the most part, reach the exact and full sound proper to the vowel as accented; but it should make a more or less near approach to this, — yet retaining enough of the modified form to indicate that it belongs to an unaccented or weakly accented syllable.

§ 42. In the marking of the pronunciation of unaccented syllables, in this Dictionary, the intention is to give in each case — the e in pru′dent, nov′el, etc. (§ 94), and a in in′fant, o′ral, etc. (§ 69), excepted — the mark of that one of the clear vowels employed in accented syllables to which the unaccented vowel is to be considered as making the nearest approach when properly uttered in quite deliberate speech; as, ĕx-press′, ăd-mit′, cŏr-rect′. In the case of the naturally long vowels when under weakened accent, it has been thought best, as a practical matter, to indicate the modified sound by a modification of the mark, — thus, ā̆, ē̆, ī̆, ō̆, ū̆. The absence of accent sufficiently distinguishes the wide ē in ev′ĕr, pa′pēr, etc., from the narrow ē in fērn, mēr′cy, etc.

THE VOWELS OF THE ALPHABET IN DETAIL.

A.

§ 43. This letter is employed for eight variations of sound: ā; ǟ; â; ă; ä; å; ą; ạ; besides the exceptional sound as in § 47, and the sound of obscure quality, indicated by a italic (§ 69). For a as part of a digraph, see §§ 44, 49, 54, 57, 70, 76, 82, 85, 99, 104, 108, 113, 131.

§ 44. (1.) Ā, ā; as in āle, fāte, māk′er, profāne′, pā′tri-ar′chal. This sound is otherwise represented, as in pain, day, gaol, gauge, break, veil, whey, also aye (ever); and is the name sound of the letter. The vowel is commonly called "long a."

§ 45. We have here the mid-front-narrow vowel (§ 10); of which the wide (§ 13) correlative is ĕ (ĕnd). Taking this for the main element, the English ā commonly ends with a vanish — a brief terminal sound — in ĭ (ĭll), sometimes running even to ē (ēve). As thus spoken, the vowel is really diphthongal (§ 19 e) — made with a continuous glide, — though with much less rapid change near the initial than near the vanishing element. The vanish comes out more clearly in some syllables than in others. It is not used in the Scottish dialect; and is not apt to be given by people of foreign birth and training.

§ 46. There is some diversity in the sound of this vowel, as spoken by different persons and as occurring in different words; not only as concerns the vanish, but as the sound verges more or less toward the lower and more open vowel, â (câre, § 49), or is even made identical with that; the more open form occurring mainly as an archaic survival.

§ 47. The radical part of the ā sound, widened usually so as to be undistinguishable from ĕ (ĕnd), is the exceptional sound of a in a′ny, ma′ny, Thames, and of ai in said, a-gain′, a-gainst′. See § 82.

§ 48. (2.) Ā̆, ă̄; a modification of the preceding vowel in syllables without accent; wider (§ 13), ranging between ă (ăle) and ĕ (ĕnd); and never taking the vanish (§ 45). It occurs in the endings -ace, -age; as, pref′ăce, sol′ăce, rav′ăge, ad′ăge, etc. The ending -ate, in the case of verbs, takes ă (ăle), with accent, primary or secondary (though with the secondary accent not marked in the Dictionary); as, re-lāte′, ad′vo-cāte (v.), ag′gre-gāte (v.), etc.; while, in the case of nouns and adjectives, ā̆ without the accent is commonly used; as, sen′āte, ad′vo-cāte (n.), ag′gre-gāte (n.). Also, ā̆ often occurs as preceding another vowel — usually accented — in the following syllable; as, ā-e′ri-al, chā-ot′ic, Ju′dā-ism. In words like mis′cel-lā-ny, sal′u-tā-ry, sump′tu-ā-ry, the a, before ny or ry final, and with the preceding syllable unaccented, has properly this sound; but if the preceding syllable be accented, as in bot′a-ny, dī′a-ry, sal′a-ry, pri′ma-ry, boun′da-ry, the ā sound (āsk, so′fā, § 66) is usually preferred; yet in con′tra-ry and lī′bra-ry the ā̆ is the easier to give, and in these and some others of the class is common and allowable. In final syllables, the tendency of the sound is to turn to ĭ (ĭll) in rapid speech, — passing through ĕ on to ĭ (§ 83): this change is common in words like vil′lāge, sur′fāce, etc., in which the ā̆ is followed by a j or an s sound. The ai in moun′tain, cap′tain, etc., as also ay in Mon′day, etc., takes nearly the ā̆ sound, — falls between this and ĭ (ĭll). For the ā̆ sound in accented syllables, see § 81.

§ 49. (3.) Â, â: only in syllables closed by r and more or less strongly accented; as in câre, shâre, compâre′, pâr′ent, plow′shâre′. The sound is also represented by ê (thêre, § 84); and otherwise, as in air, bear, heir, prayer.

The a before r does not ordinarily take this sound when the r precedes a vowel or another r in a following syllable of the word; as in păr′i-ty, păr′ry, compăr′i-son, chăr′i-ty, etc. (ă as in ăm); and in vā′ry, Mā′ry, etc. (ā usually as in āle). See an analogous rule for ē (fērn) in § 85, and for ô (ôrb) in § 114. But the sound remains without change by an added verb inflection or the suffix -er; as in com-pâr′ing, shâr′er; and appears exceptionally in pâr′ent, pâr′ent-age, gâr′ish, and sometimes indeed in vâr′y, Mâr′y; also in châr′y, wâr′y.

§ 50. The sound is the narrow correlate of the wide ă (ăm); — see §§ 10, 13. It is not simply a prolongation of that sound; though, if we attempt such prolongation, the organs naturally and unconsciously slide into a position which gives the sound in question.

§ 51. Mr. Henry Sweet (Handbook, p. 28) describes this vowel as low-front-narrow; identifying it with the French père, faire, and distinguishing it from the mid-front-narrow ā (āle). It is, indeed, essentially the same as the so-called "open e" in French (tête, père, etc.), German (echt, leben, etc.), Italian (cielo, etc.). It was the common sound of the English long a two hundred years ago, and still later; and the influence of the r would tend to hold it unchanged.

The vowel is otherwise described by some authorities, either because of a difference in the actual pronunciation, or of a disagreement as to the analysis of what may really be the same. The dictionaries of Walker, Smart, Stormonth, and Ogilvie identify it with ā (āle). Mr. Bell gives also an alternative pronunciation, as of e in let prolonged; and the sound is thus described by A. J. Ellis, and by Dr. Murray in the New English Dictionary. But the ē in lĕt is the wide of ā (āle). To pronounce the e in let, end, as the exact short of â (câre) is a foreign peculiarity; characteristic also of the Irish and the Scotch.

Most of the authorities above cited notice the vanish, or glide, in ē (ev′ēr) through which the vowel passes on to the following r. — See § 250.

§ 52. The error, into which some have been misled, of giving to this â the sound of ā (āle), with the usual vanish in ĭ (ĭll), is a fault which no orthoëpist would sanction. When the vowel before r is, in some words, — such as par′ent, ere, e′er, their, etc., — respelled by ā (āle) as well as å, it is to be understood that the vanish is in ē (ev′ēr) and not in ĭ (ĭll).

§ 53. In syllables under least accent, the å never occurs: in words like wel′fâre, war′fâre, cor′sair, etc., the final syllable may be regarded as actually under a secondary accent (§ 34).

§ 54. (4.) Ä, ä: as in ärm (emphatic), ädd, fät, răn′dom, häve, păr′i-ty; also in plaid, guar′an-ty, etc.; the regular "short a." It is usually followed by a closing consonant sound (§ 24). — See § 50.

§ 55. Those to whom this peculiarly English sound is not native rarely learn to give it accurately; — see § 23. They use å (åsk) in its place. There are English and Americans who do the same; as is always done in the Scottish dialect.

§ 56. As UNACCENTED, it is common only in initial closed syllables: as in ăl-lude′, ăt-tack′, ăn-nul′; in cases like ab′străct (a.) there is actually a secondary accent on the final syllable. — See §§ 34, 38, and Fig. 3.

§ 57. (5.) Ä, ä: as in ärm, fär, fäther, äh, älms, pälm, etc.; having equivalents as in hearth, aunt, guard, etc.; commonly called the "Italian a." In England, and rarely in America, this sound is given to the e before the r in clerk (§ 85); and this in ser′geant is the leading pronunciation in both countries.

§ 58. This is the narrow variety of the open-throat vowel. — See §§ 8, 31, 62; see, also, Fig. 1.

§ 59. There is a good deal of latitude of variation in the actual pronunciation of the "Italian a" in English, extending all the way between the farthest extremes possible for ä (ärm) and å (åsk, § 62). A medial form is at present most approved.

§ 60. In unaccented syllables, whenever the mark ä (ärm) is employed, it is to be understood that the vowel is wider — nearer to å (åsk) — than when accented; the latter would, in the opinion of some orthoëpists, be the proper mark.

§ 61. (6.) Å, å. This is the sound to be preferred in certain words or syllables ending in sk, ff, ft, th, ss, sp, st, nce, nt, nd; as, åsk, ståff, gråft, påth, påss, gråsp, låst, dånce, chånt, com-månd′; and in some other cases; besides its frequent use in unaccented syllables, — for one class of which (§§ 68, 69) it will in this Dictionary be indicated by the Italic a.

§ 62. This vowel is to be clearly distinguished from ă (ăm, hat, § 54). In organic position it lies between this and ä (ärm); but in quality, as well as position, more nearly resembles the latter. It is the wide correlate of ä (ärm, §§ 8, 13), and is naturally shorter (§ 21): the main part of the tongue is raised higher; the lower jaw is not so much depressed, and the mouth is not so widely opened; hence, ä (ärm) has been commonly and correctly described as broader than å (åsk). — See Fig. 1.

This vowel slides easily into ŭ (ŭp, § 16), especially when unaccented; and a slight retraction of the tongue with elevation of the back part will convert the vowel to ŏ (nŏt); the reverse transition, as of nŏt to nåt, Prŏv′i-dence to Prâv′i-dence, bŏd′y to bâd′y, etc., is a common fault. — See § 25.

§ 63. Fulton and Knight described the a in the class of words in question as "a shortened form of the Italian a." A. J. Ellis (Pronunciation for Singers), pp. 33, 34), speaks of "the fine, thin sound of 'A', much used by delicate English speakers, especially ladies," for the words in question; which sound, he says, is "common now [1877] in Paris" as a sound of the French a. The sound is one which many persons have not ear and vocal organs so trained as to appreciate.

§ 64. The pronunciation of the a in the words in question (§ 61) is, indeed, various and unsettled. It is so represented by Mr. Ellis in his Early English Pronunciation, pp. 1147–48; and the New English Dictionary, by Dr. Murray, gives an optional pronunciation, that of ä (ärm) or of å (măn, ăm), or intermediate, as that here indicated by å. In the dictionaries of Walker, Smart, Cooley, Stormonth, and Ogilvie, the mark is ă (ăm). Yet, by Smart (Principles, 11) and by Cooley, the proper sound is admitted to be intermediate between ă (ăm) and ä (ärm). With this diversity in general usage, — in both America and England, — it seems clear that the sound å (åsk), the wide of ä (ärm), as the best and most agreeable to the ear, is to be preferred.

§ 65. In UNACCENTED SYLLABLES this sound (å) is of frequent occurrence, though in rapid speech more or less obscured and falling sometimes into the neutral form. — § 17.

§ 66. In open syllables unaccented, as in å-rise′, di′å-dem, cå-lor′ic, mu′tå-ble, bot′å-ny, sal′å-ry, vil′lå, so′få, mes-si′åh, etc., this is clearly the proper sound when the syllable is at all prolonged in emphatic or deliberate utterance. — See §§ 37, 42.

§ 67. In the dictionaries of Walker, Cooley, Stormonth, and Ogilvie, the mark in all such cases is ă (ăm). Yet probably no one would regard this as the exact sound, if we except those who pronounce the ă (ăm) as foreigners are apt to do (§ 55), that is, with a proper å (åsk) sound. Walker admits (Principles, 92) that, in such cases as a-bound′, di′a-dem, i-de′a, Af′ri-ca, etc., the sound approaches the "Italian a." Smart describes this as the Italian a, but as coming near to the "natural," or neutral (§ 17) vowel. The New English Dictionary, by Dr. Murray, marks it as the "obscure" form of the a in bar (ärm, § 57), and the a before r in ar-te′ri-al, etc., as the "ordinary," and not the "long," form of the vowel. — See § 39.

§ 68. In final or medial syllables, unaccented, and closed by n, l, nt, nce, nd, s, ss, st, p or ph or ff, m, or d, as in syl′van, va′can-cy, loy′al, va′cant, guid′ance, hus′band, bi′as, com′pass, break′-fast, jal′ap, ser′aph, dis′taff, mad′am, myr′i-ad, etc., the vowel, when prolonged in deliberate or emphatic speech, will quite commonly be sounded as å (§ 61), or nearly enough to be properly so described. The dictionaries which give the mark ă (ăm) in open syllables, as above stated (§ 67), use the same also in this case, and with the same inexactness.

§ 69. Some authorities note a difference between the two cases of the a when the syllable is open (§ 66) and when it is closed by n, l, etc. (§ 68). Because of such diversity of opinion, an ITALIC a is used, in the spelling for pronunciation in this dictionary, for the latter of these cases; as in in′fant, fa′tal-ly, etc. — See § 42.

§ 70. (7.) Ą, ą: as in ąll, tąlk, swąrm, wą′ter, ap-pą′l′, bą′l′sam, etc.; and otherwise represented in haul, draw, awe; also in ôrb, bôrn, bought, etc. (§ 113), as often if not more commonly pronounced. The diagraphs au and aw are the special representatives of this sound in English; though, in some words, such as aunt, daunt, etc., the au has passed over to the Italian a sound.

§ 71. This is the low-back-narrow-round vowel (§ 11), — made with the place of constriction (§ 6) between the back tongue and the lower border of the soft palate. — See Fig. 4.

§ 72. There are words, such as sąlt, mąlt, quą′rel (§ 74), etc., in which the sound falls between ą (ąll) and ŏ (ŏbey); or in which there is, at least in some cases, an allowable latitude of variation. — See § 115.

§ 73. In UNACCENTED SYLLABLES, initial, the sound sometimes occurs, somewhat modified by being less narrow and less rounded; as in ą-might′y, au-thor′i-ty, aus-tere′, au-dac′i-ty, ą-though′.

§ 74. (8.) A, a: as in was, what, wan'der, wal'low, qual'i-ty, etc. The sound is identical, or at least nearly so, with that of ŏ (ŏdd, nŏt), and ow in knowl'edge, etc. In the respelling for pronunciation, it will be represented by ŏ. — See §§ 72, 118.

E.

§ 75. The letter e has seven variations of sound: ē; ḙ; ę; ĕ; ḛ; ē, accented; and e, the wide variant, unaccented; besides its use as a silent letter and its use with consonant value; and besides the sound of obscure quality indicated by e (italic); as see in § 94. For e as part of a digraph, see §§ 44, 49, 57, 70, 76, 80, 82, 84, 85, 97, 99, 103, 104, 108, 113, 126, 131, 141, 143.

§ 76. (1.) Ē, ē: as in ēve, mēte, con'crēte', cen'ti-pēde', etc.; with the name sound of the letter; and having equivalents as in feet, beam, deceive', peo'ple, key, Cæ'sar, ma-chine', field, quay, Phœ'bus, Por'tu-guese', etc. The vowel is commonly called the "long e."

§ 77. This is the high-front-narrow vowel (§ 10). As actually uttered, especially when preceded by a consonant, it is not usually this absolutely simple element: it commonly starts at a slightly wider degree, somewhat towards ĭ (ĭll), and moves to a position the closest possible to a consonant y. — See § 127; also Fig. 2.

§ 78. (2.) Ḙ, ḙ: in unaccented syllables, as ḙ-vent', ḙ-plt'o-mē, crḙ-ate', dḙ-lin'ḙ-ate', so-ci'ḙ-ty; shorter usually than accented ē (ēve), and somewhat less narrow, verging towards, or sometimes even reaching, the wide ĭ (ĭll). See § 37.

§ 79. To give ŭ (ŭp) in place of ḙ (as so-ci'ŭ-ty), or to give the quite narrow form ē (as so-ci'ē-ty), is, in either case, offensive to the ear of a correct speaker.

§ 80. (3.) E, ę. This, in genuine English words, occurs only with i or y added, so as to make a digraph; as in eight, prey, vein, etc. The sound is identical with ā (āle, § 44) and will be indicated by ā in the respelling.

§ 81. In naturalized and half-naturalized foreign words, as forte, ballet, consommé, auto-da-fé, José, and in the interjection eh and in a few other instances, we have this sound of e accented, but without the vanish (§ 45) in ĭ (ĭll). In such cases, it may, in the respelling, be well enough indicated by ā (§ 48).

§ 82. (4.) Ĕ, ĕ: as in ĕnd, pĕt, tĕn, ĕr'ror, etc.; otherwise as in feath'er, heif'er, leop'ard, friend, di-ær'e-sis, as'a-fœt'i-da, bur'y, guess, a'ny, said, etc.; the so-called "short e;" — mid-front-wide; correlative of the narrow ę (eight), ā (āle); — see §§ 45, 47. The syllable is usually closed by a consonant sound.

§ 83. UNACCENTED it occurs, as in ĕx-cuse', ĕn-large', ĕf-face', ĕs-tate', ĕr-ro'ne-ous, lev'ĕl, in'tĕl-lect', car'pĕt; and sometimes it verges to or towards ĭ, as in ro'sĕs, hors'ĕs, fair'ĕst, wis'ĕst, riv'ĕt, end'ĕd, wick'ĕd, wool'ĕn, kitch'ĕn, ĕn-cour'age; — see § 38.

§ 84. (5.) Ê, ê: as in thêre, whêre; also in heir, etc.; only before r; — identical in sound with â (câre, § 49); — heard also unaccented in whêre-by', where-in', etc.

§ 85. (6.) Ẽ, ẽ: as in fẽrn, ẽrr, hẽr, ẽr'mine, vẽrge, in-fẽr', per-vẽrt'; — otherwise as in sĩr, bĩrd, earn, mĩrth, mỹr'tle, guer'don, etc. It occurs before r and in accented syllables; but not when the r precedes a vowel or another r in the following syllable of the same word, as in vĕr'y, pĕr'il, mĕr'ry, ĕr'ror, hē'ro, pē'ri-od, etc., except that verbs having this sound of the letter almost always retain it when inflected or suffixed; as in con-fẽr'ring, de-tẽr'ring, con-fẽr'rer, re-fẽr'ri-ble, etc.; — compare § 49. In England, the word clerk is still commonly pronounced with the ä (ärm) sound (§ 57), as Berkeley and Derby were till of late. And, in New England, an ä (ärm) or â (câre) sound was once usual in such words as serve, earth, earn, term, etc. For ser'geant, see § 57.

§ 86. This is the mid-front-mixed-narrow vowel (§ 16), — distinguished as front from the back û (ûrn), and as narrow from the wide unaccented e (ev'er, § 90).

§ 87. The distinction of sounds here noted, as between ẽ (fẽrn) and û (ûrn) is quite clear; and the majority of orthoëpists at the present time are in favor of observing it. By the majority of English-speaking people, however, it is not actually observed; some habitually use the distinctive ẽ (fẽrn) sound; while others use the û (ûrn) sound, and the unsettled usage makes such diversity allowable; — see § 3.

§ 88. By Walker, the e in this case is marked ĕ, as in bĕd, ĕnd, etc.; and the i is marked in some words ĕ, and in others ŭ (ŭp). Yet he says: "This sound [of e] before r is apt to slide into short u, and we sometimes hear mercy sounded as if written murcy; but this, though very near, is not the exact sound." Smart speaks of er and ir, when distinguished from ur, as "delicacies of pronunciation that prevail only in the more refined classes of society;" describing the sound as one that lies between ä (ālе) and ŭ (ŭp). The New English Dictionary, by Dr. Murray, employs two different symbols, one for the sound in fern, fir, etc., and another for that in urn, fur, etc., the vowels being, he says, "discriminated by the majority of orthoëpists, though commonly identified by the natives of the south of England."

§ 89. The ẽ (fẽrn) — the sound as here intended to be understood — is quite near to the French eu, as in jeu, jeune, leur, amateur, etc., and to the German ö, oe, as in schön, Goethe, etc.; the difference being that the French and German words take more of a labial modification.—See §§ 16, 86.

§ 90. (7.) UNACCENTED ẽ (before r), — as in ev'ẽr, read'ẽr, sev'ẽr-al, pẽr-form', rev'ẽr-ent, cav'-ẽrn, etc., with equivalents in e-lix'ĩr, zeph'ỹr, ac'tôr, etc., — is the wide variant of the accented ẽ (fẽrn, §§ 85, 14, 16 b). Its quality as such is plain in deliberate utterance, though somewhat obscured in rapid speech. The closing element of the eu in grandeur has this sound, and that of the û in nature, pleasure, etc., takes it or inclines to it; — see §§ 19 b, 135. Closely related to this is the sound explained below (§§ 91–94); as also the voice-glide (§ 95). — See §§ 105, 124, 135, 145.

§ 91. The e before n in unaccented syllables, — as in pru'dent, sev'en-ty, rai'ment, con-ven'ient, cre'dence, de'cen-cy, etc., — takes a sound of obscure quality in rapid speech. In such words as dif'-fer-ence, in'fer-ence, rev'er-ent, where the n is followed by another consonant, there is a plain similarity between the vowel of the middle and that of the final syllable, if the words are pronounced as they usually and naturally are by the majority of well-educated people. The n may make the e a little higher than it is before r, but should not change it to ĕ (ĕnd); — though, indeed, this form is inculcated by some orthoëpists. The e before n in wool'en, kitch'en, etc., takes properly the ŏ (ĕnd) sound, which in rapid speech tends toward ĭ (ĭll); — see § 83. To allow a sound like ĕ (ĕnd) in de'cent, pen'i-tent, sev'en-ty, etc., would bring in a tendency in these cases to let the sound fall to ĭ (ĭll), which certainly should be avoided. Another fault, not less to be avoided, is that of suppressing the e in pru'-dent, de'cent, etc., giving only the voice-glide (§ 95), as if to be pronounced pru'd'nt, etc. In words like com'ment, con'vent, — correct with ĕ (ĕnd), not ẽ (ev'ẽr), — we have the final syllable actually under a secondary accent.

§ 93. Authorities differ as to the true character of the obscure unaccented sound of e before n, l, r (§§ 90–92), or hesitate to decide upon it.

§ 94. In the case of words like pru′dent, nov′el, etc. (§§ 91, 92), because of the difference of opinion as to what the clear sound of the e before n or l should be when prolonged (§ 42), the vowel will be indicated by a bare ITALIC e in the spelling for pronunciation.

§ 95. The unaccented vowel of obscure quality before n or l, as above (§§ 91–94), is sometimes reduced to the attenuated form called the voice-glide (§ 17); expressed not only by an e, but by an i or an o, — e being most frequently written after l, — as in eat′en, o′pen, shriv′el, a′ble, ba′sin, par′don, etc. In some cases, the articulative position for the n or l is so nearly the same as it is for the preceding consonant that no sound need come between, and the n or l may serve in place of a vowel for the formation of a separate syllable; as in eat′en, gold′en, swol′len, can′dle, căt′tle, etc. But, even in these cases, it is allowable to interpose the voice-glide. When the articulative positions are quite different, the voice-glide naturally intervenes in making a separate syllable with the l or n. Thus a sound comes between b and l in a′ble, as not in ā′bler, blow; and between p and l in ap′ple, as not in ap-ply′; and between k and l in tac′kle, as not between the same sounds in cloud; and in e′ven a sound comes between v and n, as not in eve′ning.

Syllables are also made by m with the voice-glide, which in that case is more nearly allied to ŭ (ŭp) than to ĕ (ev′ĕr); as in schism (sĭz′m), chasm (kăz′m), mi′cro-cosm (-kŏz′m), etc.

Syllables thus made with n, l, or m, may be closed by an added consonant; as in strength′ened, chasms.

The voice-glide (§ 17) differs from other cases of the neutral vowel by its extreme brevity only — ordinarily the extremest possible; — and, when followed by n or l, is more nearly related to ĕ (ev′ĕr) than to any other clear vowel sound.

In this Dictionary, an APOSTROPHE (′) is used in the respelling for pronunciation to indicate the vowel elision or the voice-glide; as, par′d′n, a′b′l, etc.

§ 96. (8.) The letter e silent. As annexed to a consonant at the end of a syllable, this letter has no sound of its own; but serves, in accented syllables, to indicate the preceding vowel as long; as in cāme, tōne. But in some instances the preceding vowel has become short; as in gĭve, hăve, bădе, dŏne, hyp′o-crĭte, etc.; it is short also in ol′ĭve, prom′ĭse, ex-am′ĭne, etc. The e also marks a preceding c or g as soft; as in ser′vice, rav′age, vice, o-blige′. In the endings -ed, -en, of past tense and participle of verbs, the e, except in the solemn style, is for the most part elided, — unless the verb stem ends in d or t, as in add′ed, o-mit′ted, thus requiring the -ed to be fully pronounced.

§ 97. (9.) The letter e, with consonant value. Like the short ĭ (§ 106), when e unaccented is closely followed by another vowel, it naturally takes on, or falls into, more or less of a consonantal y sound, and the e thus makes, or may make, with the following vowel an impure, or semi-consonantal, diphthong (§ 19 b). In Shakespeare and Milton the words hideous and lineal make but two syllables; and lineament, three. The pronunciation as above described is upheld by Cooley, Smart (Principles, 146–7), and Walker. After t, or d, or ç, or s, this y sound often coalesces with the consonant and changes its sound; as in right′eous (rī′chŭs; by some pronounced rīt′yŭs, rī′chē-ŭs, etc.), gran′deur (grăn′dŭr; by some, grănd′yēr; by others, grăn′jēr; § 135), mi-ca′ceous (-shŭs), o′cean (ō′shən), and nau′seous (nȩ′shŭs). Even after the sound of the e has changed the preceding consonant, it may still appear, especially when the accent falls upon the following vowel; as in o′ce-an′ic (ō′shē-ăn′ĭk), nau′se-a′tion (nȩ′shē-ā′shŭn), etc. Orthoëpists are now more generally in favor of not allowing the vowel to take consonant value at all in cu-ta′neous (-nē-ŭs), hid′e-ous (-ē-ŭs), lin′e-al (-ē-al), mal′le-a-ble (-lē-ă-b′l), and the like. See §§ 106, 134, 135.

I.

§ 98. This letter has five variations of sound: ī; i͡; ĭ; ï; i; besides its use with consonant value; and besides its significance as a voice-glide (§ 95).

For i as part of a digraph or trigraph, or of a diphthong, see §§ 44, 48, 49, 54, 76, 82, 84, 90, 99, 103, 104, 106, 126, 129, 131, 141.

§ 99. (1.) Ī, ī: as in īce, tīme, sīght, chīld, bīnd, gī′ant, mīght′y, jus′ti-fī′a-ble; with the name sound of the letter. It is commonly called "long i." Equivalents are vie, guile, height, aisle, thy, buy, choir, rye, eye, ay or aye (yes) as sometimes heard.

§ 100. The sound is diphthongal. The main part is the glide between the initial element and the terminal ĭ (ĭll); — see § 19. The initial varies, ranging all the way from ä (ärm) to ĕ (ĕnd). It falls more commonly between å (åsk) and ŭ (ŭp).

§ 101. (2.) i͡, i͡: unaccented; as in i͡-de′a, bi͡-ol′o-gy, tri͡-bu′nal, bi͡-car′bo-nate, di͡-am′e-ter. The quality of the sound is subject to variation; the diphthong being more curtailed as the syllable takes less stress and shorter quantity.

§ 102. (3.) Ĭ, ĭ: as in pĭque, ma-chĭne′, in-trĭgue′, etc., — words from other languages, with the foreign and original sound of the letter retained. The sound is the same as that of ē (ēve, § 76), by which it is represented in the respelling for pronunciation.

§ 103. (4.) Ĭ, ĭ: as in ĭll, pĭt, pĭt′y, ĭs′sue, ad-mĭt′, un-tĭl′, etc. Equivalents are hў̆mn, guĭn′ea, sieve, breech′es, been, Eng′lish; others, as solitary instances, are bus′y, wom′en. It is the high-front-wide vowel, corresponding to the high-front-narrow ē (ēve), ĭ (pĭque); and is the so-called "short i;" — see §§ 10, 22, 24. Those to whom the English is not native rarely learn to give the proper wide sound of this vowel, but follow their own vernacular in a form between ĭ (pĭt) and ï (pĭque); — see §§ 15, 23.

§ 104. UNACCENTED SYLLABLES with this vowel are, in the greater number of cases, closed by a consonant, as in cab′ĭn, ĭl-lume′, ĭn-hab′ĭt. When silent e is annexed to the consonant, the vowel sometimes has the sound of ĭ (ĭll), and sometimes of i͡ (i͡dea, § 101), or of ī (īce): as, doc′ĭle, gen′tĭle; mar′i-tīme, pan′to-mīme; of′fīce, sac′ri-fīce; er′mīne, car′bīne, etc. Open unaccented syllables also are made with this vowel, but with the sound modified to a slightly less wide form, as in pac′ĭ-fy, dĭ-vide′, fĭ-nance′, o′rĭ-ent, etc.; — see § 38. An obscure sound between ĭ (ĭll) and ŭ (ŭp) — really the neutral-vowel sound — is quite commonly given in pac′i-fy, di-vide′, vis′i-ble, hor′ri-ble, ca-pac′i-ty, e-ter′ni-ty, vis′i-bil′i-ty, etc.

The pronunciation of the i of the endings -ine, -ide, in the terminology of chemistry, is unsettled as between ī (īce) and ĭ (ĭll) and ï (pĭque). The Chemical Section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1891, after four years' discussion, passed a vote recommending the dropping of the e from the suffix -ide and the suffix -ine (except in the case of doubly unsaturated compounds), and recommending that the terminations then be uniformly pronounced -īd, -īn, and -īne; as, bro′mīn, chlo′rīn, chlo′rīd, bro′mīd, etc., — the spelling offered by Dr. Webster in 1828.

The sound ĭ (ĭll), unaccented, is represented by: ei in for′eign, sur′feit, for′feit-ure, etc.; ui in cir′cuit, etc.; ie in mis′chief, etc.; ia in par′lia-ment, car′riage, etc.; oi in tor′toise, etc.; and is commonly heard in the final syllables of sur′face, vil′lage, etc., and of cap′tain, etc., and of end′ed, wick′ed, etc.

§ 105. (5.) Ĭ, ĭ, before r, as in fĭr, bĭrd, vĭr′tue, vĭr′gin, ĭrk′some, etc., is the precise equivalent of ĕ (fĕrn, § 85). The wide variant of the same, the equivalent of ĕ (ev′ĕr), occurs in unaccented syllables in a few instances; as in ta′pĭr, na′dĭr, e-lix′ĭr. Both will be represented by ĕ in the respelling for pronunciation. But in some words the sound, before l or n, is reduced to the voice-glide; as in e′vil (e′v'l), ba′sin (ba′s'n), etc.; — see § 95.

§ 106. (6.) The letter i, with consonant value. A short i, closely followed by another vowel, often and naturally falls into a y sound, and thus produces an impure diphthong (§ 19 b), and makes one syllable out of two; as in fil′ial, min′ion, gen′ius, etc. A preceding s surd, c soft, or sc, by fusion with the y, takes an sh sound; and an s sonant or a z takes a zh sound, — as in man′sion, con′scious, vi′cious, vi′sion, gla′zier, — the i sound being wholly lost. A preceding t does the same, — having first taken an s sound, after the fashion of the French, and originally in words from that language, — as in na′tion, par′tial, etc.; with the exception, also in accord with the French usage, that, when preceded by a syllable ending in s or x, the ti takes a ch (tsh) sound; as in ques′tion, mix′tion, Chris′tian, etc. After g, the i falls out, leaving the g soft; as in re′gion. When d precedes the i, the di in some words becomes, or tends to become, a j (dzh); as cor′dial, In′dian, etc., are sometimes, and sol′dier is always, pronounced. When accent, primary or actual secondary, falls on the following vowel (as in ex-pa′ti-ate, par′tial′i-ty, cor′di-al′i-ty, as-so′ci-a′tion, fa-mil′i-ar′i-ty, Chris-tian′i-ty), there is a diversity of usage; some not sounding the i as a vowel at all; as ĕks-pā′shāt, păr-shăl′ĭ-tў, kôr-jăl′ĭ-tў or kôrd-yăl′-, ăs′sō-shā′shŭn [as some pronounce], fā-mĭl′yăr′ĭ-tў, krĭs-chăn′ĭ-tў; others bringing it in after the changed consonant, or after the y sound; as ĕks-pā′shĭ-āt, păr′shĭ-ăl′ĭ-tў, ăs-sō′shĭ-ā′-shŭn, kôr′jĭ-ăl′ĭ-tў or kôrd′yĭ-ăl′-, fā-mĭl′yĭ-ăr′ĭ-tў [so some]; and others retaining the i unchanged and without consonantal effect except the conversion of a preceding t into an sh or a ch sound; as in ăs-sō′sĭ-ā′shŭn, kôr′dĭ-ăl′ĭ-tў, fā-mĭl′ĭ-ăr′ĭ-tў, păr′shĭ-ăl′ĭ-tў, krĭs′chĭ-ăn′ĭ-tў; and this may be regarded as in most cases the leading manner of pronouncing such words. — See § 97.

O.

§ 107. This letter has seven sounds: ō, ŏ, ô, ŏ, o̤, o̤, o̤; besides representing merely the voice-glide (§ 95), and besides the exceptional sound in wom′en (§ 103). For o as part of a digraph, see §§ 44, 70, 74, 76, 82, 97, 99, 106, 108, 113, 118, 126, 128, 129, 131.

§ 108. (1.) Ō, ō: as in ōld, nōte, bōne, ō′ver, pro-pōse′, lō′co-mō′tive, etc.; with equivalents as in roam, foe, shoul′der, grow, owe, sew, yeo′man, beau, haut′boy, door: with the "regular long" name sound of the letter (§ 22).

§ 109. This vowel takes as a vanish a distinctly perceptible o͝o (fo͝ot), or sometimes o͞o (fo͞od), and is thus diphthongal (§ 19). The radical part is the mid-back-narrow-round vowel (§ 11). The lips are contracted to a circular opening; and the jaw is less depressed than for ą (ąll, § 71), and more than for o͞o (food). The vanish is not universal, yielding more or less to counteracting influences. In the Scottish dialect it is not heard.

§ 110. There has prevailed in New England a pronunciation of o in certain words, — home, whole, coat, stone, only, and many others — which does not give the vanish, and takes a wider form than ō (ōld), and the same as ô (ô-bey′) brought under the accent. The symbol ô (§ 112) would serve to indicate this pronunciation with sufficient exactness.

§ 111. Before r in accented syllables, the long o naturally and more properly takes a vanish in û (ûrn), instead of o͝o (§ 109); as in glō′ry, ōre, dōor, fōur, flōor. This has led to a change, that has prevailed in England to an increasing extent of late years, so as to have there become the rule, — replacing the regular long sound by one akin to that in ôrb, lôrd, ôr′der, etc. (113); so that mourn′ing will rhyme fairly well with morn′ing, pork with fork, and o′ral is not clearly distinguished from au′ral. No such peculiarity was noticed by Walker, and it must have arisen since his time. It is recognized in the present work only by an occasional reference to this paragraph.

§ 112. (2.) Ô̤, ô̤. In unaccented and usually open syllables, in English; as in ô̤-bey′, tô̤-bac′cô̤, bil′lô̤ws, Sô̤-crat′ic, pô̤-et′ic, eu′lô̤-gy, a-nat′ô̤-my. It differs from the ō (ōld), not only by absence of the vanish, but by taking a wider form, which varies, inversely, according to degree of stress and prolongation. The symbol will serve well for the more common o, accented as well as unaccented, in most other languages. See § 110.

§ 113. (3.) Ô, ô: only before r; as in ôrb, lôrd, ôr′der, ab-hôr′, ex-hôrt′, etc.; with equivalents, as in extraordinary, georgic, etc.

The most generally approved pronunciation here represented by this symbol is essentially identical with that of ą (ąll, § 70); but deviations from this are so frequent, either on the one side toward ō (ōld) or on the other toward ŏ (ŏdd), as to render the symbol somewhat indeterminate as an indication of the actual usage. See § 115.

§ 114. The ô is limited to accented syllables with the r not followed by a vowel or another r in the same word; the case of inflected verbs (as ab-hôr′ring) and the cognate nouns in er (as ab-hôr′rer) excepted; while otherwise the vowel is ŏ, as in fŏr′eign, ŏr′ange, tŏr′rid, or o̤, as in mo̤re, o̤′ral, sto̤′ry. Compare §§ 49, 85. But in many cases which come under this limitation, the o before r takes a different sound; as in fōrd, af-fōrd′, pōrt, pōr′ter, im-pōrt′, etc.

§ 115. There are some words in which o before consonants other than r takes usually and properly a medial sound, as between ą (ąll) and ō (ōld), ô (ôbey), or ŏ (ŏdd); as song, long, soft, dog, cross, gone, off, trough, oft, of′ten, cost, broth, cloth, god, etc. The range in this case — and also in the preceding (§ 113) — is rather between ą (ąll) and ô (ô-bey′, § 112), or ō (ōld, § 108) without the vanish, than between ą (ąll) and ŏ (ŏdd, § 118). Which of these places it is into which the pronunciation actually falls can in any instance be ascertained by observing the degree of the lip rounding: if this be greater, i. e., closer, than for ą (ąll), the variation is towards ô (ô-bey′) or ō (ōld); if not so great, it is towards ŏ (ŏdd). In the respelling for pronunciation in the Dictionary, this medial sound is usually indicated by ŏ (ŏdd), with a reference to this paragraph.

§ 116. In unaccented syllables, we sometimes have the ô (ôrb); as in môr-tal′i-ty, fôr-get′, ôr-dain′, etc., and in fôr, nôr, ôr, unaccented as well as accented; but in such case hardly needing to be distinguished from ŏ (nŏt).

§ 117. The organic position for ạ (ạll) lies between that for ä (ärm) and that for ō (ōld). The sound is developed, historically, sometimes from one side and sometimes from the other. Hence it is that, in the normal spelling, we have the ạ (ạll) sound represented both by a and by o.

§ 118. (4.) Ŏ, ŏ: as in nŏt, ŏdd, etc.; the so-called "short o;" having ạ (in wạs, etc.) as an equivalent, and also ow in knowl'edge and ou in hough, lough. This is the low-back-wide-round vowel, — so placed, that is, in our scheme, though, in fact, as ordinarily spoken, it is not precisely the wide form of the narrow ạ (ạll, § 70), but of a sound that would fall between this and ō (ōld, § 108); — see § 115. That is to say, the ŏ is higher in position than would be the exact wide form of ạ (ạll). The lips are much less contracted than for ạ (ạll), but more than they would be for the exact wide of that vowel.

§ 119. For a certain faulty pronunciation of this vowel, changing it to ȧ (ȧsk), see § 62.

§ 120. UNACCENTED SYLLABLES with ŏ are naturally closed by a consonant; as in cŏn-clude', ŏc-cur', ŏp-press', dis'cŏn-tent', rec'ŏl-lect', re'cŏm-mit'; falling into the neutral sound in very rapid speech. They are rarely final syllables, the ȯ (sȯn) sound (§ 124) being commonly given in final syllables. — See § 39.

§ 121. (5.) Ọ, ọ: as in dọ, prọve, tọmb, etc.; with sound the same as o͝o (§ 126); and represented by o͝o in the respelling for pronunciation.

§ 122. (6.) Ọ, ọ: as in wọlf, wọm'an, bọs'om, etc.; with sound the same as o͝o (§ 128); and represented by o͝o in the respelling for pronunciation.

§ 123. (7.) Ȯ, ȯ: as in sȯn, dȯne, ȯth'er, wȯrm, etc.; doubled in flood, blood, etc.; — with sound the same as ŭ (ŭp, § 141), or before r as û (ûrn, § 139); and, in the respelling for pronunciation, represented by these symbols in accented syllables.

§ 124. In UNACCENTED SYLLABLES the ȯ occurs frequently; as in ac'tȯr, at'ȯm, wel'cȯme, fel'ȯn, bish'ȯp, big'ȯt, etc., with sound either as ŭ (ŭp) or as ĕ (ev'ĕr), or between the two, mainly as influenced by the succeeding and somewhat by the preceding consonant. In the respelling for pronunciation, it will appear before r as ĕ (§ 90), and in most other cases as ŭ (§ 142); but sometimes before n it represents merely a voice-glide; as beck'on (bĕk''n), rea'son (rē'z'n). — See §§ 39, 95.

Oo.

§ 125. The double letter oo has two sounds, marked o͝o and o͞o; besides the oo in door, and in flood, etc. (§§ 108, 123).

§ 126. (1.) O͞o, o͞o: as in mo͞on, fo͞od, fo͞ol, bo͞ot, etc.; with equivalents in do, canoe, group, rude, rue, recruit, rheum, drew, manœuvre; the double letter oo is the special representative of the sound in English.

§ 127. The sound is that of the high-back-narrow-round vowel (§ 11), and is made with the labial opening still more contracted than for ō (ōld, § 108). As ordinarily spoken, especially when joined to a preceding consonant, it is not this absolutely simple element, but begins with a very brief sound of o͝o, or one intermediate, gliding quickly from this to the narrow position on which it dwells and rests, and which brings it near to a consonant w sound; — compare § 77. — See Fig. 4.

§ 128. (2.) O͝o, o͝o: as in fo͝ot, wo͝ol, go͝od, cro͝ok'ed, etc. Equivalents are ọ (wọlf) and u̧ (fu̧ll). It is the wide correspondent of the narrow o͞o (§ 126). Orthoëpists do not always agree as to what words shall be marked o͝o and what o͞o. Thus, in Stormonth's, the Encyclopædic, and Smart's Dictionaries we have ho͝ok, so͝ot, and in the Imperial Dictionary of Ogilvie, ho͞ok, so͞ot; and Walker limits the "shorter" sound of oo to the eight words, wool, wood, good, hood, foot, stood, understood, withstood. There are local diversities as between these sounds. The o͝o sound is heard in England before r, instead of the o͞o (fo͞od) common in America; as in poor, sure, etc. — See Fig. 5.

Ou, Ow; and Oi, Oy.

§ 129. For the analysis of these two diphthongs, see § 19. Examples are out, owl, etc., and oil, boy, etc. The ou is often mispronounced by giving the initial as ä (äm) instead of ȧ (ȧsk). UNACCENTED, or only secondarily accented, we have ou in out-ra'geous, out-live', out-run', etc.

As digraphs, these combinations of letters take several other sounds; as in soup, route, Zouave (zwäv or zo͞o-äv'), soul, cou'ple, griev'ous, know, bil'low, knowl'edge, cham'ois, av'oir-du-pois', choir, tor'toise, etc.

U.

§ 130. This letter has six variations of sound, viz.: ū; ů; u̧; u̇; û; ŭ; — besides its use as a silent letter and its use with consonant value; — and besides the exceptional sound, like ĭ (ĭll), in bus'y, let'tuce, fer'ule.

For u as part of a digraph, or trigraph, or diphthong, see §§ 44, 54, 57, 70, 76, 82, 99, 103, 108, 118, 126, 129, 131, 139, 141–144.

§ 131. (1.) Ū, ū: as in ūse, fū'sion, pūre, cūbe, tūne, dū'ty, lūte, jū'ry, hū'man, nū'mer-ous, etc.; the so-called "long u;" having equivalents as in beauty, feodal, feud, pew, ewe, lieu, view, cue, suit, yule, yew, you.

§ 132. The general type of the sound is that of a diphthong, which has o͞o (fo͞od) for the terminal and main part, and for the initial a very brief and evanescent element, which is the high-mixed vowel (§ 16) nearly related to ĭ (ĭll) or to ē (ēve), and bearing a close resemblance to French u and German ü; and in the greater number of cases there comes in, as a connecting glide, a more or less full sound of consonant y, which in many cases encroaches upon, and either almost or even quite displaces, the initial vowel element. When preceded by certain consonants, the y glide has a tendency to be fused with the consonant, thus taking the shape of a sibilant (sh or zh) glide, — the whole process issuing in what is called the palatalization of the consonant. This tendency, in accented syllables, — to which the ū is limited, — should be severely restricted. Also, in no case whatever should the y sound be forced in when it will not come in smoothly as a glide. See §§ 134, 135.

§ 133. There is a lip-rounding, not only on the final element o͞o, but in some degree on the initial element, becoming gradually closer all the way through. This labialization of the entire diphthong is a point of importance to be kept in mind. It comes, indeed, naturally with b, p, m, v; as in beau'ty, pūre, mūte, view.

§ 134. At the beginning of a syllable, as in ūse, ū'nit, etc., the (labialized) initial vowel element is nearly displaced by the (likewise labialized) y glide, — the ū here sounding the same as you in the words you, youth, etc. Next to this, the y sound comes in most clearly after p, b, m, v, f, c hard and g hard; as in pūre, bū'reau, beau'ty, mūte, view, fū'tile, cūbe, gūle. After n, it is less prominent; as in new, nū'mer-ous. After s, l, j, th, the y sound comes in with difficulty, and need not be attempted; as in sūit, as-sūme', lūte, jū'ry, thew, en-thū'si-asm; and after t or d, the ū may better be given without the y; as in tūne, tū'tor, due, dūke, dū'ty.

A B C D E F G H I J K L M

In all these cases of y omitted, the initial vowel element is retained: it would be quite wrong to give an ordinary o͞o (fo͞od) for the entire sound in such words. The y, if attempted after t or d, is apt to degenerate into a sibilant, and produce, with the consonant, a decided tsh or dzh sound, thus making due the same as Jew. It is better not to allow more prominence to the sibilant sound after t or d than the slight degree that goes with p, as in pūre, c, as in cūbe, and even with f, as in few. The y sound after d or n is common in England, as in due, new, etc., but not in America. As exceptional, the s in sure, sug'ar, and their derivatives, is entirely displaced by the sh, and the vowel is reduced to o͝o (fo͝od) or o͝o (fo͝ot); — see §§ 136, 137.

§ 135. (2.) Ů, ů: representing a modification of the sound of ū (ūse; § 131), in unaccented syllables; as in ů-nite′, grad′ů-ate, ac′tů-ate, em′ů-late, jů-dĭ′-cial, in′sů-lar, lů-cid′ĭ-ty, val′ů-a-ble, vir′tůe, na′tůre, ver′důre, cen′sůre, sen′sů-al, etc. The sound differs from that of ū (§ 132) by taking for the final element the wide o͝o (fo͝ot) instead of the narrow o͝o (fo͝od); and, after t, by a partial or entire change of the y into a more or less clear sh, and usually after d into a zh glide; as in na′tůre, ver′důre, etc. A preceding s, in a syllable not initial (as in cen′sůre, sen′sů-al, etc.), takes more commonly an sh sound, and a z or an s sonant (as in az′ůre, sei′zůre, lei′sůre, cas′ů-al, etc.) takes a zh sound, and the vowel becomes nearly, if not quite, the same in sound as ụ (joy′fụl, § 138). But the preceding s remains unchanged in initial, and sometimes also in medial syllables; as in sů-preme′, con′sů-lar, in′sů-lar, etc. After j or l in the same syllable, the vowel has nearly or exactly the sound of ụ (joy′fụl); as in jů-dĭ′cial, ad′jů-tant, lů-cid′ĭ-ty, in-dis′so-lůble, etc.; — see § 138. Before r, in rapid speech, the sound often inclines towards ĕ (ev′ĕr); as in na′tůre, cen′sůre, etc.; — see § 90.

§ 136. (3.) Ụ, ụ: only after r; as in rụde, rụ′mor, rụ′ral. The sound does not differ essentially from that of o͝o (fo͝od, § 126). It may, however, with propriety, take a brief initial in o͝o (fo͝ot), or nearly this, somewhat more prominently than does the oo after other consonants (§ 127). The sound occurs after s, as exceptional, in sure and its derivatives, the s heard as sh (§ 134).

§ 137. (4.) Ụ, ụ: as in bụll, fụll, pụt, pụsh, pụll, etc.; with sound the same as o͝o (fo͝ot, § 128); heard also in sụ′gar after s as sh (§ 134).

§ 138. UNACCENTED the ụ occurs in the syllable fụl; as in joy′fụl, joy′fụl-ness, fụl-fill′, etc.; also, after r, in frụ-gal′ĭ-ty and a few other words (see § 30). The ů after s with an sh sound, and after s or z with a zh sound, is reduced nearly or quite to the equivalent of this simple element; as in cen′sůre, sen′sů-al, cas′ů-al, az′ůre, etc.; and also after s with its proper sound, and after l and j, as in sů-preme′, con′sůlar, lů-cid′ĭ-ty, ad′jů-tant, etc. — See § 135.

§ 139. (5.) Û, û: as in ûrn, ûrge, bûrn, hûrl, etc.; with equivalents as in worm, journal, etc., before r only. The sound, as more commonly heard, is the narrow form of the mid-back-mixed vowel (§ 16), corresponding to the wide ŭ (ŭp, § 141). But the pronunciation varies considerably, — the vowel taking sometimes an extreme low-back position like that in sir or work, as these words are commonly spoken by the Irish, but often taking the mid-front position of ĕ (fĕrn). — See § 87.

§ 140. The vowels of the mixed kind (§ 16) are closely allied to the consonant r, — those of the back position, ŭ (ŭp), û (ûrn), to the r near the back palate; and the front, ĕ (fĕrn), ē (evēr), to an r further forward. These vowels glide on to the r in such a way that the point of transition from vowel to consonant is not clearly discernible, — or, when the r loses all consonant quality, is absolutely indiscernible. — See §§ 250–252.

§ 141. (6.) Ŭ, ŭ: as in ŭp, bŭd, tŭb, ŭs, ŭsh′er, ŭn′der, etc.; the "short u;" with equivalents as in sŏn, does, blood, touch, etc. The vowel is the mid-back-mixed-wide (§ 16) in our scheme.

§ 142. In UNACCENTED SYLLABLES the vowel occurs in cĭr′cŭs, sŭb-mit′, vol′ŭn-ta-ry, cir′cŭmstance, etc., and falls readily into the "neutral vowel." The ou in pi′ous, etc., oi in por′poise, eo in dun′geon, etc., usually the ow in bel′lows, etc., and the final element of the eou in right′eous, etc., and of iou in gra′cious, etc., and the o in at′om, irk′some, na′tion, etc. (§ 124), have essentially the same sound.

§ 143. (7.) U silent: as part of the silent digraph ue in plague, rogue, tongue, cat′a-logue, antique′, etc., and of others in gauge, guard, guess, co-quette′, guide, build, pla′guy, etc. See references in § 130.

§ 144. (8.) U, with consonant value, and the sound of w, before another vowel: after q or g; as in qual′ĭ-ty, quite, ques′tion, gua′no, lan′guage, etc.; also after s, as in per-suade′, suite, etc.; — forming in these cases the initial element and the consonantal glide of an impure diphthong (§ 19 b). The kw part of the sound in quality, etc., may otherwise be regarded as a compound, or diphthongal, consonant; — see § 213, NOTE. The w sound is derived, of course, from the original sound of u as the equivalent of o͞o (fo͞od), or o͝o (fo͝ot). So far as u gives up a part of its leading modern sound by fusion with a preceding t or d or s, — as in nature, verdure, sure, etc., — it has consonantal value.

Y.

§ 145. This letter, as a vowel, has four sounds; that is, all the sounds of ĭ except ĭ (pĭque), viz.: (1) ȳ = ī; as in de-fȳ′, stȳle, flȳ; (2) y, the equivalent of ĭ (ĭdea); as in hў-e′na, mў-ol′o-gy; (3) y̆ = ĭ; as in nў̆mph, lў̆r′ic, and (unaccented) plĭ′ў̆, hap′ў̆; ey final serving thus instead of y̆; as in hon′ey, mon′key, ab′bey, etc.; (4) ỹ = ē or ĭ; as in mỹrrh, mỹr′tle and (unaccented) zeph′ỹr.

The UNACCENTED y̆ final does not fall to quite the least accent such as is taken by ĭ in a medial syllable; as in van′ĭ-tў̆, etc.

For y as part of a digraph, or trigraph, or diphthong, see §§ 44, 48, 49, 76, 80, 99, 129. For y as consonant, see § 272.

ANALYTICAL SURVEY OF THE ENGLISH CONSONANT SOUNDS.

I. DIFFERENCE BETWEEN VOWEL AND CONSONANT.

§ 146. RESONANT ACTION; OBSTRUCTIVE ACTION. Resonance in an unobstructive oral passage is the characteristic feature of the vowels; and obstructive action is the leading feature of the consonants; and the kind and manner of the obstruction is what mainly distinguishes one consonant from another.

§ 147. Obstruction is, indeed, not absent from the vowels. The vocal cords are set in vibration only as they obstruct the outgoing stream of breath. But this action does not go to differentiate the vowel qualities. There is, too, for the vowels, what may in one sense be called an obstruction in the oral passage; but only, or mainly, as involved in the formation of a vowel chamber (§ 7), and thus as reënforcing instead of obstructing the sound, and as subservient to the resonance that imparts the vowel quality. So far as it acts otherwise, it gives to the vowel more or less of a consonantal character.

§ 148. Resonance, on the other hand, is not absent from the consonants. The nasals, n, m, ng (§ 207), are each marked by their peculiar resonance. The same is true of the sonant mutes, b, d, g (§ 195). But all these are ruled out from the vowel category by the absolute closure of the oral passage. Except in the nasals and the sonant mutes, resonance has no share in forming the characteristic quality of the consonant.

§ 149. In the word woo, we have the consonant and the vowel made by nearly similar organic positions, and thus both coming close to the border line of separation: but, for the consonant, the organs are relaxed so as to act mainly by obstructive friction; while, for the vowel, they are in the tense condition fitted for resonance in the vowel chamber. For the word ye, the case is essentially the same.

§ 150. RELATION TO THE SYLLABLE. The respective relations of vowel and consonant to the syllable are a natural consequence of their different characteristics as above stated. It is thus that vowel and consonant readily combine into one continuous sound without remission of stress, in passing either way, from vowel to consonant or from consonant to vowel, — close junction being made by the glide (§ 161) from the one to the other; while it is only in certain cases that consonants can flow into consonants with no break or no sound interposed.

§ 151. The open, resonant character of the vowels fits them for stress; and this, together with their ready junction to any consonant, makes their occurrence natural when stress is employed. Hence, no fully accented syllable is without a vowel; and a vowel is ordinarily essential under the weak stress of a slightly accented or an unaccented syllable. The only exceptions are made by the consonants l, m, n, which sometimes, either with or without a voice-glide, discharge the vowel function; as in par'don, cous'in, peo'ple, peo'pled, chasm (kăz'm), etc. — See §§ 95, 158, 194.

II. THE FORMATIVE ELEMENTS OF THE CONSONANTS.

§ 152. What we call the elementary sounds of speech, — and indicate for the most part by separate alphabetic characters, — are more or less composite in their nature and mode of formation. This is especially true of the consonants; so that it becomes necessary to inquire into what we may call their Formative Elements, or the several modes of action which go to their making.

There are eight such modes of action, as follows: —

§ 153. (1.) BREATH SOUND. This is produced by forcible action of the breath impinging upon the organs at the place of obstruction. Thus we have f, s (in so), sh, and th (in thin), and the aspirate h; — see §§ 181, 198. Of this general kind is the explosive action (§ 157) of the surd mutes, p, t, k, and of the consonantal diphthong ch, as in chin.

§ 154. In whispered speech, we have breath sound only. The breath-sound consonants are precisely the same in loud speaking as in whispering. The whispered vowels are breath sounds, made by friction of the breath upon the vocal cords set too wide apart for tone vibration, and modified by resonance so that the vowels are individually recognized. The same kind of action upon the vocal cords may also be substituted for tone in whispering such consonants (b, z, l, etc., § 155) as have tone in loud speaking. — See § 5.

§ 155. (2.) OBSTRUCTED TONE. By this is meant tone proceeding from the larynx, and either partially suppressed or blunted and weakened, or otherwise obstructively modified.

Thus it is, in one or the other of these ways, in the nasal consonants, m, n, ng; in the sonant mutes, b, d, hard g (§ 196), and in the consonantal diphthong j (§ 211), otherwise written dg or simply g (soft); thus also in w, v, th (in thy), z, zh (the z in azure); and thus in y, l, r. — See §§ 199, 200, 201.

§ 156. (3.) MUTE ACTION. In certain cases, all sound is shut off, leaving an interval of silence, during which the oral passage is closed at some place, — certain audible effects being produced in connection with the opening or closing, or both the closing and the opening, of the passage, before and after the interval.

This occurs in the case of the surd mutes, p, t, k; and of the consonantal diphthong ch, as in church, hatch, etc. — See §§ 185, 210.

§ 157. (4.) EXPLOSIVE ACTION. The mutes (§ 184), both surd and sonant, are characterized by an explosion, occasioned by pressure of the breath confined within the closed oral passage followed by sudden release of the closure; as in pea, bee, too, cow, etc. — See §§ 186, 191.

§ 158. When t or d is followed by l, as in bat'tle, i'dle, hur'tle, bus'tle, the release of the closure will be only partial, that is, at the sides of the back tongue, as required for the l; — see § 241. When t or d is followed by n, as in eat'en, of'ten, wid'en, etc., there will be no release of the oral closure, and the explosion will be nasal, made by breaking the contact between the soft palate and the pharyngeal wall, — the tone of the nasal consonant thus opening abruptly; thus of'ten differs from or'phan with r suppressed, though not, like eat'en, sounding the initial of the t; — see § 243. When a p or a k is followed closely by l or n, as in open, people, ply, plea, clay, buckle, sicken, etc., the breaking of contact will be in two places at nearly the same instant.

§ 159. (5.) OCCLUSION; IMPLOSION. By occlusion, the sudden closing of the oral passage by the lips or otherwise, and by implosion, the sudden compression of the air, in the oral passage, behind and against such a barrier, a peculiar resonance will be imparted to the sound that accompanies or immediately follows the movement. These modes of action are, of course, limited to the stopped, or mute, consonants. — See § 189.

§ 160. (6.) GLIDES. Consonants, and classes of consonants, are characterized by certain effects, as the voice passes from consonant to vowel or vowel to consonant, which, though appertaining really to the vowel, sometimes contribute essentially to the character we ascribe to the consonant. They are special cases of what are called glides (§ 162).

§ 161. When a consonant is followed by a vowel in the same syllable, as in say, saw, toe, beau, go, etc., there is of necessity an interval during which the action passes from the organic position for the consonant to that for the vowel, and during which the sound will not be at any time the sound proper to the consonant or to the vowel. In passing from vowel to consonant, as in ass, ought, ash, on, ebb, etc., we have this action reversed. Thus, in the glide to or from a nasal consonant, — as in on, no, — there will be a gradual taking on or putting off of the nasal quality.

§ 162. The term "glide" — meaning an intermediate sound connecting two successive elements — is properly applicable, not only with reference to quality of sound, as above explained, but also with reference to stress as gradual or abrupt, in the transition from one element to the other. The meaning with this application is of much the greater importance in the discrimination of consonant quality. The different FORMS OF ABRUPTNESS with which an element may be begun or ended are considered in §§ 163, 164.

§ 163. One form of abruptness is produced, as initial, by forcing a passage through between the vocal cords pressed tightly and resistingly together, thus striking the tone more or less abruptly, — or, as terminal, by checking the tone more or less abruptly through the reverse process. Such action is called the "catch of the glottis," or the "check of the glottis;" the former more properly describing the action as initial; and the latter (illustrated by a hiccough), as terminal. The matter here set forth is important for the characterization of the surd mutes, p, t, k (§§ 186, 189).

§ 164. Another form of abruptness, initial or terminal, occurs when the breath part of an h sound, or any other breath sound, precedes or follows. In the case of h initial, as in the exclamation ha, a momentum is given to the breath organs and the breath current, while the vocal cords are wide apart, and thus they are struck forcibly and suddenly the instant they are brought together for tone vibration; while in the case of terminal h, as in ah, the tone ceases abruptly the instant the cords are relaxed and separated for the passage of the toneless breath; — see § 181. For the surd fricatives, f, s, sh, th (§ 198), the effect is similar, with the only difference that arises from the less force employed; — as in foe, see, show, thin, off, ass, ash, bath, etc., as such syllables are commonly uttered.

§ 165. (7.) CLICKING. This is altogether different from breath sound and from laryngeal tone. The sound is produced by the sudden and forcible impact of one surface upon another, or by the sudden and forcible separation of two adherent surfaces. Action of this general description bears an important part in the articulation of the mute consonants (§§ 186, 189).

§ 166. (8.) TRILL. This, in speech, consists in a series of rapidly recurring partial, or perhaps sometimes entire, interruptions of a prolonged sound, as the effect of a current of breath, sonant or toneless, driving some one of the organs away from a position of contact or of proximity with another, to which it constantly returns by elastic or muscular force; — as in the case of the trilled r. Such action is possible, not only with the tongue, but with the lips, with the uvula, with the epiglottis, and with the vocal cords. The general process is essentially the same as that by which tone is itself produced: a trill sufficiently rapid would be heard as an untrilled and smooth tone.

NOTE. — This is distinct from the trill in music, which is produced by alternating between two tones of slightly differing degrees in pitch, — in singing effected, of course, by action of the vocal cords.

III. THE MORE GENERAL CLASSES OF THE CONSONANTS.

The consonants may be classified in a general way under the following heads; as they are also exhibited in the Table given in § 179.

§ 167. (1.) ORAL and NASAL. For the oral consonants, the passage from the larynx through the nose is, or at least should be, entirely cut off, by having the soft palate closed upon the wall of the pharynx, as a valve, — thus leaving open the passage through or into the mouth. For the nasal consonants, m, n, ng, the passage through the nose is open, by depression of the soft palate, thus allowing the stream of vocalized breath to pass, while the way through the mouth is cut off.

§ 168. The nasal consonants are made by breath sound in whispering; but in speaking aloud are not normally so made in any case.

While the oral consonants form a quite general class, the nasal consonants, as a special class, will have further consideration hereafter (§ 207).

§ 169. (2.) SONANT and SURD. The consonants that are made with obstructed tone, as before described (§ 155), are, because of their tone quality, distinguished as "sonant," — the same term being applied to the vowels, made all with pure tone. The consonants that are made with breath sound only (§ 153) and those made by mute action (§ 156) are denominated "surd," because of the absence of tone. The sonant elements are otherwise called voiced, or vocal, or intonated, or phthongal. The surds are otherwise styled nonsonant, nonvocal, voiceless, unintonated, toneless; and sometimes, less properly, whispered. The surds are sometimes distinguished as sharp; or, in the case of p, t, k, as hard; and the cognate sonants, as weak, or flat, or soft. The substitute for tone, employed in whispered speech for the sonants, was described above (§ 154).

§ 170. All of the sonant consonants have corresponding, or cognate, surds, except r, l, m, n, ng, w, y; as shown in the Table below. — See §§ 179, 213, 214.

§ 171. The difference between sonant elements and breath sounds is not the difference between tone and noise. The breath sounds are indeed noise, or such in large part; but it is noise of a special kind. Some of the sonants, and indeed any of them at some times, may have a large admixture of noise, yet without, or apart from, any element of breath sound.

§ 172. The rule that in the same syllable a surd consonant is followed only by a surd, and a sonant only by a sonant, — as in whipped (hwĭpt), robbed (rŏbd), locked (lŏkt), egged (ĕgd), lashed (lăsht), lodged (lŏjd), hissed (hĭst), advised′ (-vīzd′), whips (hwĭps), babes (bābz), laughs (lăfs), lives (lĭvz, v., or līvz, n. pl.), chintz (chĭnts), adz, etc. — holds in most cases; but does not hold for the sonants l, r, m, n, ng, w, and y; as in help, art, curse, hence, else, smile, ply, try, fly, ink, quill, cue, — with bulb, hard, Mars (-z), etc., — except in the case of verb and noun inflections; as in kills (kĭlz), killed (kĭld), curs (kûrz), hens (hĕnz), etc. We have an exception also in the dth of width and breadth. Compare also lymph, strength, and see § 215.

§ 173. It is not difficult to utter the surds, — that is, the mere breath sounds, — corresponding to the sonants, l, r, m, n, ng, w, and y; but, except in whispering, such sounds form no part of the English language, as ordinarily and properly spoken.

§ 174. The preceding statement is subject to the qualification that the surd form of l, r, m, n, w, or y, may allowably occur as a glide (§ 162), especially after a continuous surd; as in flow, sly, free, smith, snow, swim, fume (§ 132); and, indeed, sometimes after a mute; as in play, try, twine, etc. But this is merely a transitional sound, through which the sonant form of the same is quickly reached.

§ 175. By some authorities, the term aspirate has been used as an equivalent for surd as here employed. The term was originally employed to distinguish the third variety of the mutes in Sanskrit and Greek, namely, p, t, k, as followed by a rough breathing, or h sound (p + h, t + h, k + h). As these sounds were finally replaced in the Greek and Latin by the mere breath sounds, like f, th as in thin, and ch as in the German, the term "aspirate," or "aspirated mute," was carried on and applied to these. But, aside from this, the term "aspirate," by most grammarians and most phoneticians, is applied exclusively to the rough breathing or the h sound.

§ 176. (3.) MOMENTARY and CONTINUOUS. The mute consonants, whether surd, p, t, k, or sonant, b, d, hard g, are necessarily brief in duration: they can not, like the continuants, be sustained as long as the breath will hold out. The same is the case with the compound consonants, ch, j, etc., of which the mutes, t, d, form a part; — see §§ 210, 211. The h sound has (§ 181), — as have also its compounds (§§ 212, 214), — essentially an abrupt character, which makes it properly momentary.

All the sonant elements outside of the mutes, and all the breath-sound consonants except the h, are continuous, being limited only by the duration of the breath in a single expiration.

§ 177. (4.) PLACE OF ARTICULATION. The classification of the consonants according to the place of obstruction especially concerned in their formation, is of great importance. The total obstruction may include much more than the place here referred to, and designated as the Place of Articulation. Thus, for t, d, n, and r, the whole length of the tongue is involved, but it is the extreme front part that is especially concerned in the effect. In the case of l, the whole of the tongue is also involved, but it is the sides of the tongue that are more directly concerned in the production of the sound.

§ 178. LABIALS, DENTALS, PALATALS, GUTTURALS, etc. With the place of articulation at the lips, we have the labial consonants, p, b, m, w; though the w involves obstructive action between the back tongue and the soft palate, as well as at the lips. The f and v, though sometimes made by the lips alone, yet being commonly made with the upper teeth against the lower lip, are properly described as labio-dentals. The proper articulating position for t, d, n, s, z, and one variety of r, in the English, is taken with the point of the tongue on the hard palate, commonly not far from the front teeth, though sometimes actually on the teeth; or again, the part of the tongue back of the point may be employed, instead of the point. These consonants are classed together under the name of dentals. The th, surd (as in thin) and sonant (as in thy), — made between the point of the tongue and the teeth, — may be designated as lingua-dental; though, when the teeth are wanting, the sound may be well produced between the tongue below and the gums and lip above; it is, however, commonly ranked among the dentals. The place of articulation for sh, zh, and the compounds ch and j, and for one variety of r, is on the upper surface or the point of the tongue and the back part of the hard palate; and they are therefore called palatals. Also, y, and even l, may be classed with them under the same name; the place of articulation for these includes a part of the soft palate as well as of the hard palate. The gutturals are k, g hard, and ng, the place being on the soft palate and the back part of the tongue. The nasals, m, n, ng, may be discriminated as labio-nasal, lingua-nasal or dento-nasal, and gutturo-nasal.

All these are sometimes arranged in three classes, namely: gutturals and labials, as above, with an intermediate class under the name of linguals and sometimes with the designation palatal substituted for guttural.

§ 180. Supplement to the Table. For the sake of simplicity, none of the compound, or diphthongal, consonants, except ch and j, are included in the Table. Others which might have a place in it will be described hereafter (§§ 212–218).

There are some who would insist on a place in the Table for a surd (wh) corresponding to the sonant w, and for a special surd corresponding to y; — see § 183.

IV. SPECIAL CLASSES OF THE CONSONANTS.

§ 181. THE H SOUND. The consonant h stands by itself as an element sui generis. It differs in many respects from the other breath sounds. Except that the glottis always has a share in its formation, its articulative position is various, being always very near to that of the vowel with which it is joined, and differing from it only in being somewhat wider. It differs from other breath sounds in being made with a wider opening and the emission of a greater volume of breath, and in being made with some friction all along the oral passage, but most of all in its abrupt character, which requires it to be classed as one of the momentary elements. It has been usual to describe it as continuous; but prolongation is not normally employed, and the abrupt glide to or from the vowel, as in ha or ah, is really the essential thing: the breath may be expelled with so little friction as to be quite inaudible, and yet the h be perfectly recognized by the abrupt effect in the vowel. — See § 175.

§ 182. The articulative procedure for this element is a movement: — at the outset, in the case of h initial, as in ha, ho, hay, he, the glottis is wide open, that is, the vocal cords are widely apart, and the position of the organs in the mouth is more open than that required for the following vowel; at the end of the movement, the vocal cords come close together for tone, and at the same instant the organs fall into position for the vowel. In the case of a final h, as in ah, oh, if the h is actually sounded, the foregoing process is reversed. — See § 164.

§ 183. The h sound is capable of preceding or succeeding any voiced consonant; though in such case liable to run into the voiceless form of the consonant. In the ancient Greek, as the rough breathing, it often preceded r, as well as the vowels. In English, it precedes and is compounded with w in when, etc. (§ 212), and y, in hue, humid, etc. (§ 214); though in these cases a brief vowel sound actually intervenes before the consonant part of the w or y. There is no h sound in the digraphs made with h, — as sh, ch, gh, ph, th; — see § 238.

§ 184. THE MUTES. These are the chief portion of the momentary consonants. They comprise two subclasses, namely, the surd mutes, — otherwise called pure mutes, — p, t, k, to which alone the term "mute" is strictly applicable, and the sonant mutes, or impure mutes, b, d, hard g. The mutes are sometimes called stops, or checks, and sometimes explosives, and by some divisives.

§ 185. THE SURD MUTES. These, with h (§ 181) and ch (§ 210), occupy the first column of the Table (§ 179), — as the Surd division of the Momentary. The surd mutes, p, t, k, are to be studied as they occur in three different situations, namely: — at the beginning of a syllable, at the end of a syllable, and in the middle between the end of one and the beginning of another syllable.

§ 186. (1.) When initial, and opening upon a vowel, as in pea, pole, tie, toe, kill, cut, etc., — they give (a) an audible puff (§ 157) made by the sudden release of breath compressed within the distended walls of the oral cavity; they also give (b), as co-instantaneous with this, an abrupt beginning of the vowel, such as, in a forcible utterance of the syllable, amounts to a decided degree of the explosive action called the "catch of the glottis" (§ 163). There may also be (c) a slight click (§ 165), by the sudden separation of the adherent surfaces of the lips or of the tongue and palate.

By the combined simultaneous actions above described, a clearly distinguished impression is made upon the ear and the mind, though not easily or ordinarily resolved into its component elements.

§ 187. The total action, as above described, is the same, with certain modifications, when the surd mute takes after it a vocal consonant instead of a vowel. With r, as in pray, try, crow, etc., the action is essentially the same as in the case of a vowel; unless, indeed, the surd form of the r intervene (§ 174) as a glide. It is essentially the same, also, with l after p; as in play, plow, etc. With l after the k sound, as in clay, cling, etc., the attempt at simultaneous action will make the words sound as if written tlay, tling, etc. The glide from a surd mute to a y sound tends to develop more or less of a sibilant quality; as in tune, cube, pure, na'ture, etc.; — see § 134.

A surd mute never takes after it in modern English a nasal consonant, as was done anciently in the original of the word know, and in the Greek, from which we derive the word pneumatic.

§ 188. An initial surd mute is never, in English, except in one instance, followed by or compounded with a non-sonant element. A syllable can not begin in English, as in some other languages, with a ps, ts, or ks, or with a pf, tf, or kf, or with a psh or a ksh. The compound, or diphthongal, ch (tsh), as in chin, forms the single exception to the general rule. — See § 210.

§ 189. (2.) When final, and joined closely to a preceding vowel or other sonant element, as in up, hat, neck, and in harp, halt, hark, etc., there is (a) a percussive action by the sudden impact of the organs, — lip against lip, or tongue upon palate, — giving a kind of click (§ 165), plainly audible for p and t, and slightly so for k; (b) the vowel is at the same instant abruptly cut off by an absolute closure of the glottis, which may amount decidedly to the so-called "glottal check" (§ 163); and (c) the current of vocalized breath is at the same instant suddenly checked and compressed by the mode of action that was explained (§ 159) as occlusion with implosion.

§ 190. The surd mute joins the preceding element more closely in some cases than in others; and thus brings out more decidedly the effects as above described. They come out fully and strongly when, in an accented syllable, a wide (§ 13) short vowel precedes, — as in up, hat, let, sit, hut, sick, etc., — and less so with a narrow long vowel or a diphthong, — as in hope, late, seat, make, mute, rite, out, etc., — or with an unaccented short vowel, as in tu'lip, ex'it, ru'nic. — See § 23.

§ 191. When the effects above described are distinctly brought out, no further action is needed to make the consonant clearly recognizable. But, even in such case, it commonly ends with (d) an added slight puff of breath (§ 157). In the case of a long vowel (as in hope, etc.), this explosive action becomes important or absolutely essential. When the surd mute is followed by a sonant of the same articulating place and beginning another syllable, the breath explosion is suppressed; as in Et'na, ship'mate' (see § 158), cup'bear'er, back'ground', etc.; as it is also when a surd continuant follows in like manner; as in cap'tion (-shŭn), out'side', stop'thief', etc. For the case of s following at the end of a syllable, as in cats, lacks, wax, hops, etc., see § 217.

§ 192. With another surd mute preceding, as in apt, act, — a situation taken only by t, — the breath puff is the only means of indication. With a continuous breath sound preceding, there will be, besides the terminal puff of the mute, nothing more than a very abrupt ending of the breath sound; as in cast, mask, hasp, left, washed (wŏsht), hushed (hŭsht). Cases like camp, sent, sink, with a nasal preceding, will be found explained below (§ 215).

§ 193. (3.) When in a middle position, ending one syllable and beginning another, as in sup'per, ut'ter, ac-cuse', up-on', cit'y, bak'er, etc., we have all that has been described above as in the two situations. The consonant, though often written double, is itself really divided, one part going to one syllable and the other to the other, with, of course, an interval of silence between. In this situation only we may have all the constituents above described.

§ 194. When, of two syllables thus connected by a surd mute, the first being accented, the second is unaccented and has an l, m, or n, serving instead of a vowel, — as in eat'en, o'pen, sick'en, lit'tle, etc., the explosive action of the mute is modified in the manner already described (§ 158).

§ 195. THE SONANT MUTES. In these consonants, namely, b, d, hard g, we have, instead of the interval of silence that occurs in the case of the surds, a muffled tone, made by a current of vocal breath injected into the closed cavity, and taking the place of the voiceless breath that is injected in the other case (§ 186).

§ 196. When the sonant mute begins a syllable, — as in buy, day, go, blow, bray, dry, glow, grow, — it opens explosively but without the "glottal catch" upon the following element; but the vocal current that issues through the glottis is slender in volume, and hence the pressure and the consequent explosive effect will be comparatively slight.

In the sonant mutes, at the end of a syllable, the percussive action which we have in the case of the surds is usually and naturally absent; and the terminal explosion is feeble when given at all; — see § 189.

The whole action, in the sonants, is marked by less abruptness than in the surds. Hence the sonant mutes are sometimes described as "weak" or "soft," in contrast with the surds as "sharp" or "hard."

When occurring in the middle between two syllables, — as in rob'ber, ad'der, bod'y, rid'er, beg'ging, be-gin', ea'ger, — the sonant mute, like the surd (§ 193), is divided between the syllables. — See §§ 95, 158, 194.

§ 197. FRICATIVES. This term might be applied to all the continuous consonants (§ 176), even the nasals and the h sound included; since friction plays some part in all of them. But it has been commonly limited to a portion, — variously by different authorities. It will be here used for all of the continuants except the nasals.

§ 198. SURD FRICATIVES. These are f, th (in thin), s, sh (§§ 230, 255, 261, 263). They all require considerable force of breath, and a greater volume of breath than the cognate sonants. The glide to or from a vowel is characterized by more or less abruptness; — see § 164.

§ 199. SONANT FRICATIVES. These are v, th (in thy), z, zh (the z in azure), besides l and r, and w and y. The organic positions for four of these correspond respectively to those for the above-mentioned surds; — see §§ 169, 179.

§ 200. The sonant fricatives are sometimes described as buzzing sounds; but the kind of sound so described has never been fully investigated and explained. Besides the dulling of the tone, the sound is otherwise affected in a peculiar way. There is, at the place of articulation, a vibration of the elastic tissue, varying in rapidity as the pitch of the tone from the larynx is higher or lower. This responsive and secondary vibration, — not improperly called frictional resonance, — modifies the primary tone, with differences characteristic of the individual consonants of this class.

§ 201. There are, in this case, three kinds of effects supposable, and all of them perhaps may be actually combined, namely: — (a) a simple tremolo effect; (b) the conversion of a part of the tone into noise, by the reaction of the obstructive organs; besides (c) the modification of the tone without disturbance of the proper musical quality due to the regularity of the vibration.

§ 202. A vocal current from the larynx has not sufficient volume and force to produce breath-sound effects; — the force of the air current is to be distinguished from the force of the vocal sound as such. And so the sonant fricatives are not to be regarded as characterized by an intermingling of breath sound with tone. If, in the case of z, or of the zh sound as in azure, anything of an actually sibilant quality (§ 203) be perceptible, it probably is to be attributed to the initial or the vanishing part, and not to the body, of the consonant.

§ 203. SIBILANTS. This term is applicable to such of the surd fricatives as have a hissing sound, especially s and sh; and is also applied to the cognate sonants, z and zh; — § 202.

We have the sh sound not only represented by sh, but also resulting and developed from s or soft c and a following y sound, — as in sure, Asia, ocean, etc., — and from a t first changed to an s as in the French original and followed in like manner, — as in nation, partial, etc. We have the zh sound developed from z or sonant s and a following y sound, — as in azure, pleasure, etc. We have the sh sound as part of the ch in church, etc., and of the ch sound developed from a t and a following y sound, — as in nature, question, etc. And we have zh as part of the compound j, or dg, — as in judge, etc., — and of the same sound as developed from d and a y sound, — as in verdure, etc. — See §§ 97, 106, 134, 135, 210.

The breath sounds — such as f, etc. — other than sibilants may be distinguished as simple breath sounds.

§ 204. SPIRANTS. This term has been variously applied: — by some as meaning all the fricatives, surd and sonant, with inclusion of w and y. It is limited by Prof. Whitney to f and v, th in thin and th in thy, and the German ch with the cognate sonant.

§ 205. SEMIVOWELS. The vowel ē (ēve, § 76), or ī (īll, § 103), or the nearly related high-mixed vowel (§ 16), and the vowel o͞o (fo͞od, § 126), or o͝o (fo͝ot, § 128), in certain cases pass readily over, the one into the consonant y (§ 272), and the other into w (§ 267); — see § 19 b. Hence these consonants are called "semivowels." The term is also sometimes extended to l, n, r, m, as these in certain cases fulfill the office of vowels.

§ 206. LIQUIDS. The consonants l, n, r, m, are called "liquids," because they flow into other consonants and others into them.

§ 207. NASAL CONSONANTS. The general mode of formation for these has been already described (§ 167). The sound consists of tone from the larynx modified mainly by resonance and partly by friction. For m and n (§§ 242, 243), communication with the oral passage is open, but exit by that channel is cut off by closure of the lips, and by closure of the tongue against the hard palate. We thus have resonance in an oral chamber and in the nasal passage at the same time; and together with some friction in the latter. For ng (§ 246), only the pharynx and the nasal passage are concerned; the soft palate closing down upon the back tongue so as to cut off the oral cavity forward of this point. Too much friction will produce a disagreeable nasal twang.

The ng can not in English begin a syllable. An n or m, — but not an ng, — may be preceded by s sharp at the beginning of a syllable; as in snow, smile, etc.; an n, but not an m or ng, may take the s sound after it at the close of a syllable; as in hence; all three may take a z sound after them; as in hams, wins, hangs, etc.

During the glide (§ 161) from a nasal consonant to a vowel, as in my, no, etc., or to an s or z as above, somewhat of the quality of the nasal consonant will be carried on into the following element during the necessary change in position of the articulating organs. A similar effect will ensue in the glide from a vowel or an s to a nasal consonant; as in an, am, snow, etc. In the case of a vowel between two nasal consonants, as in man, name, etc., there will be a twofold effect of the kind. But, in this as in all cases, the nasal quality, in well-spoken English, will be limited to the brief gliding portions of the vowel. — See § 161.

§ 208. For the way in which the nasals are joined to a preceding explosive consonant, as in eat'en, o'pen, hack'man, etc., see above (§§ 95, 158, 191); and for the peculiar form which they take in the compound consonants mp, nt, nk, etc., as in jump, sent, ink, etc., see below (§ 215). For n or m as filling the place of a vowel, see § 95.

§ 209. COMPOUND, or DIPHTHONGAL, CONSONANTS. Certain consonant sounds are composed of more simple consonant elements so blended that the product is properly described as diphthongal. Only two of this kind were presented in the Table given above (§ 179). These and others will here be explained.

§ 210. (1.) The ch, or tsh, as in church, watch, has for the initial element what is essentially a t, though a t made somewhat further back on the tongue than an ordinary t, — or rather, the contact, while inclusive of the point, covers a part of the tongue back of the point. With this is combined an abrupt sh sound, made by a position somewhat further forward and more open than an ordinary sh, and replacing the puff of simple breath that is characteristic of t (§ 186). While sh by itself is a continuous consonant, the compound (tsh) is to be classed as momentary (§ 176).

The ch sound is followed in the same syllable by no consonant sound except only by t; as in watched (wŏcht), etc. — See §§ 172, 229.

In most cases the ch sound has been developed from an original Anglo-Saxon or Latin k sound; as in church, chin, hatch, charity, etc. It is also made by the fusion of a t with a following y sound; as in question, righteous, picture, nature, etc. — See §§ 97, 106, 134, 135, 187, 203.

§ 211. (2.) The j, or dg, or g soft, — as in jar, edge, gem, — is compounded of a d and a zh (the z in azure) sound, with the same conditions and qualifications as those above stated for ch. It is throughout the sonant correlative, or cognate, of the surd ch.

§ 212. (3.) Concerning the wh as in when, what, why, etc., there has been a difference of opinion, especially as between American and English authorities; the former contending that it is an h sound preceding a proper w; while Messrs. Bell, Ellis, Sweet, and others insist that the wh represents simply the surd correlative of the ordinary sonant w. Either way, the sound is clearly abrupt and momentary (§ 176), instead of being continuous like the sonant w.

As a matter of fact, this wh, by the greater part of even the well-educated people in England, is spoken precisely like w; the word when not differing at all from wen. Now, the customary w of the English language begins with a brief sound of o͝o (fo͝ot). A proper h sound prefixed to this produces the sound represented by wh in when, etc., as commonly heard in America, and as pronounced by some, if not by most, of the well-educated people in England, when they speak in what they themselves regard as the correct way. The word wen, with an h sound prefixed, gives us when.

The word when pronounced with the correlative of the sonant w prefixed to the vowel will give to the vowel the same abrupt beginning it has in hen. In this way, the vocality comes in not till the vowel is struck. The other theory brings in the vocality, or sonant quality, before the vowel is reached. This is the essential point of difference between the two conflicting views.

§ 213. The kw sound in quite, quality, etc., and the tw in twine, etc., are compound and momentary sounds, analogous to the wh as above; the case is the same even with the gw sound in guano.

Note. All the instances here adduced were referred to, in a previous paragraph (19 b), as containing an impure vowel diphthong made by the w sound as a connecting glide. This view may be taken with some advantage. Yet, since the preceding mute, t or k, as in twine, quite, or the aspirate h, as in when, can not be prolonged, as can the s in swim, but combines with the w in an abrupt momentary sound, it is more exact to treat the w in these cases as part of a compound consonant.

§ 214. (4.) In regard to the initial sound in hue, humid, huge, etc., there is the same difference of opinion as in the case above noted of the wh; some regarding it as the surd correlative of the sonant y; and others, as an h sound preceding the y part of the vowel.

The consonant y always begins with a brief vowel sound (§§ 205, 272), — which, in the y part of the vowel ū (ūse), is the high-mixed (16 b) vowel element nearly related to ĭ (ill). An h sound preceding and combined with this y makes the compound and momentary consonant which, in hue, etc., is followed by the vowel o͞o (fo͞od) or o͝o (fo͝ot).

What would otherwise be regarded as part of the impure diphthong ū (ūse, § 19 b) is here viewed as detached from the vowel and combined with the preceding h in a compound consonant: just as was done in the case of wh (§ 212); as explained in the Note after § 213.

§ 215. (5.) The mp in jump, presumption, etc., with the mpt in exempt, etc., the nt in sent, the nd in hand, etc., the nk in ink, etc., the ng in sing, etc., and the nch in bench, inch, lunch, etc., are peculiar compounds.

In the mp in jump, etc., the nasality sets in, — by depression of the soft palate, — while the lips are approaching for closure, and continues till they close; and thus gives the impression of an m. The lip closure is abrupt and forcible, and made with the percussive, occlusive, and implosive action before described (§ 189); and thus gives the effect of a p, even without the help of the breath explosion (§ 191), which will ordinarily be added at the close. In a word like exempt, we have the first part of a p, given as above described, and the last part of a t; thus the total combination mpt will not be simply m followed by t. These compounds are momentary consonant sounds, and in such cases, represent merely the glide (§ 161) from the vowel to the position for an m, and can not properly be prolonged.

§ 216. The compounds nt in sent, etc., and nk in ink, etc., are to be explained in a similar manner. So also is the nch (ntsh, § 210), in bench, etc. Somewhat of a similar character appertains to the nd in hand, etc.; also to the ng at the end of a word, as in sing, etc. (§ 246). The pronunciation of bench, inch, etc., is not properly represented in the way in which it is done by Walker and others, as bensh, insh, etc.

§ 217. (6.) In x (ks), as in box, etc., an abrupt s sound trenches upon the simple breath explosion of the surd mute k; and the compound is momentary. The same is true of ps and ts, as in cups, its, etc., and of nx in anxious, etc. In mps, nts (jumps, cents), the s is in the same way combined with the compounds explained above in §§ 215, 216.

§ 218. There is a difference between cents and sense; although in the abrupt transition from the n to the breath sound of the s, it is not easy to avoid entirely an explosive sound like the vanish of a t. But in cents the t is distinctly given, while the n is more fully brought out in sense, and the s is not so abrupt. Also, handsome may be made to differ slightly from hansom.

§ 219. Double Consonants. All of the diphthongal consonants, as above, have two or more components closely blended, of which one, as a separate element, would be momentary, and at least one other would be continuous; and the compound product becomes a momentary sound. The case thus differs from that of a mere junction of two or more consonants under one stress impulse, as simply successive one to the other, — such as we have in play, sky, hold, harm, glow, strive, cast, canst, etc.; all which are double, or triple, but not diphthongal.

THE CONSONANTS OF THE ALPHABET (WITH THE CONSONANT DIGRAPHS) IN DETAIL.

B.

§ 220. This is a labial sonant mute (§§ 178, 195), as in boy, cab, ebb, rob′ber, bring, blow, a′ble, herb, bulb, rhomb, robs, cup′bear′er, etc. It is usually silent after m in the same syllable; as in bomb, climb, tomb; also before t; as in debt, doubt, sub′tle; also in bdel′lium.

C.

Of this letter, there are two kinds of sound: —

§ 221. (1.) The so-called "soft c" has a sibilant sound (§ 203) of three varieties: — (a) One like s sharp (§ 256), marked ç, ç, and represented by s in the respelling for pronunciation; this sound is taken before e, i, or y; as in cede, civil, cypress, acid, glance, force, vice, etc. — (b) In a few words the letter has the z sound; as in sacrifice, suffice, discern. — (c) When ce or ci is followed by another vowel in the same syllable, the sh sound is taken, either by the c alone, — as in oceanic, viciosity, — or by the ce or ci together, — as in ocean, vicious, etc. (§§ 97, 106, 261).

§ 222. (2.) The so-called "hard c," marked ć, c, has the sound of k, and is represented by k in the respelling.

This sound is taken before a, o, or u, or a consonant, and at the end of a syllable if not followed by i or e; as in call, cave, cold, pic′ture, act, ethics, ac′rid, cry, clay, arc, talc, scan; and before e in sceptic, and before i in scirrous, etc. — See § 232.

§ 223. C is silent in czar, victuals, indict, and in muscle, corpuscle, etc.

CH.

This digraph has three sounds, as follows: —

§ 224. (1.) The more frequent sound is diphthongal, and is approximately described as tsh (§ 210); as in chin, child, church, etc.; the digraph with this sound has sometimes for an equivalent the trigraph tch at the end of a syllable; as in hatch, watch, fetch. It takes a j sound in spinach.

§ 225. The sound is otherwise represented by ti in bastion, question, Christian, digestion, etc., by te in righteous, and by t with a part of u in tex′ture, na′ture, etc. — See §§ 97, 106, 135.

§ 226. (2.) Marked Ç, ç, and with sound like sh, which is used to represent it in the respelling, in words from the French which have retained this sound; — usually initial; as in chaise, chivalry, chagrin, machine; final in mustache, barouche. — See § 261.

§ 227. (3.) Ch hard, marked Ch, ch; with sound like k, which is used to represent it in the respelling. It has this sound in words derived from the Greek, and through the Latin in all but quite modern words; as in chorus, epoch, echo, chlorine, chrism, character; in those from the Hebrew; as in Nebuchadnezzar, Enoch, etc.; exceptions are church, chart, Rachel, cherub, and the prefix arch- in archbishop, archdeacon, archduke, etc.; but the k sound remains in archangel, and in architect, architrave, etc.

§ 228. Ch is silent in drachm, schism, yacht; also in fuchsia.

D.

§ 229. This is the dental, or hard-palatal, sonant mute (§§ 178, 195); as in day, dwell, bed, hard, aimed, end, idle, hugged, enraged, lived, amazed, rugged. It sounds as t when preceded by a surd in the same syllable; as in hissed, looked, arched (hĭst, lo͝okt, ärcht); — see § 172. It is silent in the first syllable of Wednesday and in handkerchief, handsome, and windrow; but see §§ 216, 218.

F.

§ 230. This is a labiodental, and sometimes a purely labial, consonant (§ 178); a surd fricative (§ 198), giving a simple breath sound (§ 153); as in fame, free, few, staff, oft, etc. It has gh and ph for equivalents; as in laugh, photograph, etc. (§§ 236, 248). It takes the sound of v in the word of, and usually in the compounds, hereof, thereof, whereof.

G.

This letter has three sounds, as follows: —

§ 231. The hard g, marked Ḡ, ḡ, but in the respelling for pronunciation represented by g unmarked; the guttural sonant mute (§§ 178, 195); made by injecting vocalized breath into the pharyngeal cavity, closed by the soft palate, which is so arched as to bring the lower border into contact with the tongue, while on the curve it is pressed back against the wall of the pharynx; — used before a, o, u, or l, r, s, in the same syllable; as in gay, go, gun, glad, grow, lingual, gewgaw, argue, bags, haggle; — sometimes, though not usually, before e, i, or y; as in get, give, gig, muggy; — the g is always hard at the end of a word; as in hug, berg; also in the derivatives of such words, even when the doubled g is followed by e, i, or y; as in cragged, druggist, foggy; — usually hard at the end of a syllable; exceptions such as mag′ic, reg′is-ter, log′ic, ex-ag′ger-ate, are due to the e or i in the following syllable. The letter occurs in the digraph ng (§ 246) at the end of syllables. The sound is heard in x when that is equivalent to gz; as in exist, example, etc. (§ 271). It is represented by gu, as in guard, guest, etc.; by gh, as in ghost, ghastly, etc.; and by gue, as in plague, catalogue, etc.

§ 232. The interposition of a slight sound of ē (ēve) or ĭ (ĭll) between g hard and a following ä or ĭ sound, in garden, guard, guide, guile, etc., and in like manner after a k or hard c, in card, kind, etc., — upheld by the authority of Walker, — is not generally approved, though customary in some localities in the United States.

§ 233. (2.) The soft g, marked Ġ, ġ, with sound like j (§ 239), and represented by j in the respelling for pronunciation; a compound, or diphthongal, consonant (§ 211); as in gem, engine, rage, large, exag′gerate, magic, change, gin′ger, etc.; usually before e, i, or y, but before a in gaol. It has dg or dge for an equivalent, at the end of a syllable only; as in badg′er, badge, edge, judge, midg′et, etc.

§ 234. (3.) In a few words from the French, g retains the sound like that of z in azure (§ 199); as in rouge, mirage, cortége, etc.

§ 235. The g is silent before m or n final, and when initial before n; as in phlegm, sign, gnat, gnostic, etc. No g sound is heard in the digraph ng; as in sing, long, etc. (§ 246); nor in seraglio, nor in bagnio.

GH.

§ 236. At the beginning of a word, this digraph is sounded like hard g; as in ghastly, ghost, etc. It is silent after l; as in high, weigh, straight, etc.; also before t in the same or a following syllable; as in bought, wrought, caught, taught, daughter, drought, etc.; but has the sound of f in the word draught; the sound of f also commonly after au or ou at the end of a syllable; as in laugh, cough, rough, enough; but that of k in hough, lough; and is often silent in syllables after au or ou; as in usquebaugh, dough, bough, plough, through.

H.

§ 237. This is essentially a momentary sound; its nature and mode of formation have been already described (§§ 181-183); often called the aspirate. It occurs at the beginning of words, as in hate, here, hire, home, etc.; and is heard at the end in ah and oh, as they are sometimes uttered. It is represented by wh in who, whose, whom, and in whole, whore, whoop, and is a component of the diphthongal wh in when, which, etc., and in whale, white, etc. (§ 212), and of the diphthongal consonant in hue, etc. (§ 214).

§ 238. The letter is silent in heir, herb (usually), honest, honor, hour, and their derivatives; silent, more or less frequently, in hostler, humor, humble, and their derivatives, with some others, also silent, or else not sounded as h, in the trigraph tch and the digraphs ch (§§ 224–228), gh (§ 236), ph (§ 248), rh (§ 251), sh (§ 261), th (§§ 263, 264), and in phthisic, and in khan, and in John.

J.

§ 239. This, with the equivalents g soft and dg, has already been described (§ 211) as a diphthongal consonant compounded of d and zh. We have it in jar, jam, jest, jut, jury, join, etc. The sound is usually represented by g (soft) or ge or dg at the end of a syllable (see § 233), with prej'udice, proj'ect, maj'es-ty, caj'e-put, as exceptions. In some proper names of foreign origin, however, and in other foreign words, j or dj occurs at the end of a syllable; as in Aj'a-lon, hadj, Raj.

The sound is, or may be, represented by ge in surgeon, outrageous, etc.; by gi in region, religious, etc.; by di in soldier, etc.; by de in grandeur, etc.; and by d with a part of u in verdure, produce (n.), etc. — See §§ 97, 106, 135.

K.

§ 240. This is the guttural surd mute (§§ 178, 185); as in kite, skill, ask, ark, elk, ink, etc. It agrees with the sonant g (see § 231) and the nasal ng (§ 246), as involving closure of the soft palate upon the back tongue at the same place; — see § 179. It has hard c, hard ch, gh, cu, qu, que, cque, and q for equivalents; as in call, hough, biscuit (-kĭt), choir, coquet, antique, sacque, queen. The sound is the first component of the ordinary x; as in box, etc. At the beginning of a syllable before n, k is silent; as in knot, knee, etc.; ck has the sound of k alone; as in back; as does lk after a (all) or o (old); as in walk, folk, etc.

For an objectionable pronunciation, as in sky, kind, card, etc., see § 232.

L.

§ 241. This is a palatal sonant fricative consonant (§§ 178, 199), made by contact of the point of the tongue with the palate, as for t, d, n; but with the sides of the tongue in this case left free for the passage of the breath. It is one of the liquids (§ 206). We have it in lie, low, ill, all, clay, alb, hold, elf, elk, else, halt, etc. For the explosive l in battle, bustle, bridle, couple, pickle, etc., see §§ 158, 194. In these, and in some other cases, as in evil, easel, etc., the l in an unaccented following an accented syllable fulfills the office of a vowel; — see § 95. The l is silent in would, could, should, alms, balm, malmsey, calm, palm, palmer, psalm, salmon, almond, half, behalf, calf, halve, salve, calves, balk, chalk, calk, talk, stalk, walk, folk, yolk (often), with like words and their derivatives.

M.

§ 242. This is the labionasal consonant (§§ 178, 207); as in me, may, tame, him, times (timz, § 172), named, lamp (§ 215), lamps (§ 217), smile, palm, drachm, paradigm, etc. At the beginning of a syllable an m before n is silent; as in mnemonics. The m serves as a vowel in schism, etc. (§ 194).

N.

§ 243. This is the dentonasal, or linguanasal, consonant (§§ 178, 207); the oral passage being closed by contact of the point and the sides of the tongue with the palate, just as it is for t and d; the n is continuous and nasal, while t and d are momentary and oral. We have it in none, inn, ten, fern, snow, change, congressive, etc. In even, eaten, maiden, etc., it serves as a vowel; — see § 95.

§ 244. When n is final after m it is always silent; as in hymn, condemn, solemn, etc.; but when to such words is added a suffix or an inflection beginning with a vowel, the n is generally sounded (see exception below); as in condemnation, condemnatory, solemnize, solemnity, limner, autumnal, etc. So n is silent in kiln, limekiln, etc. In the participles damned, damning, condemning, contemning, hymning, limning, etc., and also in the cognate nouns condemner and contemner, usage is divided. Initial kn, pn, mn, are sounded as n; as in know, pneumatics, mnemonics, etc.

§ 245. Neither the sound of n nor of g is heard in the digraph ng (§ 246). But the n at the close of an accented syllable, with a g, c, or ch, hard, or a k or qu, commencing a following syllable, commonly takes the ng sound, and is marked n̰; as in an̰'ger, un̰'cle, an̰'chor, con̰'gress, can̰'ker, con̰'quest, etc.; but not generally (see below) if the accent falls on the syllable following the n; as in con-gres'sive, concor'dant, etc.; not in the prefixes in-, en-, on-, un-, non-; as, in'come, un'con-cern', non'com-mit'tal; not in quin'cunx, and the derivatives and compounds of quin'que; and not in pen'guin and a few other words. In e'lon̰-ga'tion, pro'lon̰-ga'tion, san̰-guif'er-ous, etc., and often in con-gres'sional, con-gru'i-ty, and like words, the n, though unaccented, retains the sound of ng, which is given it by rule in the words from which these are derived, as e-lon̰'gate, etc. It takes the ng sound also, before k, or ch hard, or x, at the end of a syllable; as in in̰k, thin̰k, than̰k, mon̰k, con̰ch, an̰x'ious, etc., making with it a diphthongal and momentary consonant (§ 216).

NG.

§ 246. This digraph represents a simple sound, namely, that of the gutturonasal consonant, which is made, like the surd k and the oral sonant hard g, by contact between the soft palate and the back tongue, but, unlike them, with a free passage between the soft palate and the pharyngeal wall; — see §§ 167, 207. It occurs only at the end of syllables; as in long, wing, hang, sing, song'stress: or with ue added at the end; as in tongue. An added inflection causes no change; as in sing'er, wing'ed, etc.; except that in the comparatives and superlatives of long, young, etc., the g goes with a proper hard g sound to the inflection, while the n takes to itself the ng sound; as, lon̰'ger, lon̰'gest.

P.

§ 247. This is the labial surd mute (§ 185); as in pea, pay, cup, pray, harp, help, spy, oppress, happy, etc. It is silent as initial before n, s, sh, and t; as in pneumatics, psalm, pshaw, ptarmigan; also in raspberry, receipt, sempstress, accompt, corps, and their derivatives. For the diphthongal mp in lamp, etc., mpt and mpts in tempt, tempts, etc., see §§ 215, 217.

PH.

§ 248. This digraph occurs chiefly in words of Greek derivation, and has usually the sound of f; as in phantom, sylph, philosophy, etc. It has the sound of v in Stephen; and, according to most orthoëpists, in nephew, though in America it has commonly its regular sound of f in the latter word. In diphthong, triphthong, ophthalmy, naphtha, and other allied words, and their derivatives, the ph is sometimes sounded as p.

Q.

§ 249. Q is in all English words followed by u, and the two together have commonly the sound of kw (§ 213); as in queen, conquest, etc.; but have that of k in a few words from the French, as in coquette, etc.; as has also the ending que in antique, burlesque, etc.

R.

§ 250. The r, when pronounced as an actual consonant, is a sonant fricative element, and belongs to the palatal, or else to what is called the dental, class of consonants (§ 178). Its several varieties all bear a close relation to vowels of the mixed order (§ 16), namely, ŭ (ŭp), û (fûrn), ē (fērn, evēr); and a glide of this kind naturally intervenes between a vowel not of this class and a following r. These vowels are made with an approximately cylindrical passage between tongue and palate: taking this position, and simply raising the point of the tongue, for friction of the breath against the edge, gives by this means the r sound; while raising the point of the tongue still higher and into contact with the palate gives the position for the nasal n, and for the surd and sonant mutes, t and d. In the words fûrn, fērn, bûrn, hûrt, bĭrd, etc., we have actually these three positions in succession, in just this order. — See § 140.

There are two leading varieties of the consonant r to be noticed, — besides also the vowelized r, as a third variety, which is not really a consonant, and besides a substitute that is sometimes used, made by a trill (§ 166) of the uvula, or of the epiglottis. Reference will here be had, when not otherwise stated, to the pronunciation of those who speak the r always as a consonant.

§ 251. (1.) The so-called dental (§ 178) r, having the same place of articulation as s, z, t, d, and n, — that is, between the point of the tongue and the hard palate not far back from the front teeth, — is employed before a vowel; as in rise, try, oral, array. It is so used by those who do, and by those who do not, employ the vowelized r in other situations. The dental variety is also favored, rather than the palatal, by conjunction with front vowels (§ 10), and with labial or dental consonants (§ 178); as in fear, fern, preach, trace, bring, harp, hurt, etc. It is usually trilled (§ 166) somewhat, but not strongly so.

The rh in rhetoric, rheum, myrrh, etc., is sounded simply as r.

§ 252. (2.) The palatal r, made between the point of the tongue and the palate at a place near the junction of the hard palate with the soft palate, is the r that naturally goes before or after the vowel ä (ärm), or any of the back vowels (§ 11), and before or after a guttural consonant; as in ärm, ûrn, wąr, rąw, rōar, cry, grow, etc. In some parts of the United States, the point of the tongue is curled back, in such a way as to bring the r under the class of elements sometimes called "cerebrals." The palatal r is less apt to be trilled than the dental r.

§ 253. (3.) The vowel-like, or vowelized, r, which prevails at present in London and the South of England, is employed in all situations, except when a vowel sound immediately succeeds either in the same or in a following word, — in which case some form of the r as an actual consonant sound is given. The vowelized r is heard either as a vowel of the mixed order (§ 16), ē (fērn, evēr), û (fûrn), ŭ (ŭp), or as a mere prolongation of the vowel preceding; as in war, far, more, here, where, care, carve, cart, heard, harp, hard, worm, warn, worn, farm, farther, turn, fern, western, etc.

§ 254. In the case of words in which r occurs between two vowels of which the first is long and accented, such as he′ro, se′ri-ous, wir′y, de-sir′ous, there is a style of pronunciation prevalent in England, but not much in vogue in America, which doubles the r, making it smooth or else merely vowelized at the end of the first syllable, and rough and trilled at the beginning of the second; as hē(r)′ro, sē(r)′ri-ous, etc. In America, this is more frequently done in words formed with an inflection or suffix after the r than in other cases; as in se-cūr′(r)ing, poor′(r)er, etc.

S.

§ 255. This letter has four different sounds, all of them sibilant (§ 203), two surd and two sonant (§§ 169, 179), as follows: —

§ 256. (1.) The proper sound of s as a surd sibilant (§ 203), is made by breath forced through a contracted channel between the tongue and the hard palate near the front teeth, and impinging upon the edges of the upper or the lower teeth; as in see, so, hiss, yes, scorn, sly, smile, snow, spy, square, stay, swim, cuffs, sense, curse, best, lisp, absurd, basis, practise, etc. The point of the tongue may be raised to the upper gums, or it may be depressed behind the lower teeth, making the contracted channel not so near the point of the tongue. Equivalents are: — c soft, as in cell, civil, vice; sc, as in scene, science, etc.; sch as in schism, schedule (as some in England pronounce); ps, as in psalm, psychology, etc.

§ 257. (2.) The sonant s (§§ 199, 202), — marked ş, — corresponding to the surd, as above, is made by the same articulative position, except that the tongue is pressed somewhat closer to the palate. The sound is precisely like that of z; as in iş, haş, ribş, rideş, eggş, illş, aimş, runş, liveş, pleaşant, poşition, diseaşe, grişly, etc. The s is sonant as the final sound of some verbs and surd as the final sound of the cognate nouns or adjectives; as use, abuse, diffuse, rise [n. & v. often alike sonant], house, etc. Notice close, with s as z in verb and noun, and s sharp in the adjective. Compare advişe (v.), advice (n.), etc.

§ 258. There is a diversity of opinion among orthoëpists as to whether the z or the sharp s sound should be used in some of the words formed with the prefix dĭs- (Walker, etc., favoring dĭz-; late orthoëpists, dĭs-); as disarm, disburse, etc.; also in case of the suffix -ese of gentile nouns; as in Chinese, Japanese, etc.

§ 259. (3.) S takes sometimes the sound of sh (§ 203) by fusion with a following y sound (§ 272), with consequent vowel change; as in version, convulsion, censure, sure, sugar, etc.; in the case of s doubled, the first is assimilated to the second; as in passion (păsh′ŭn), issue (ĭsh′ū). In a few words s takes the sh sound while leaving the following vowel unchanged; as in Asiatic, nausea, etc. — See §§ 97, 106, 135, 221.

§ 260. (4.) S takes the sound (zh) of z in azure (§ 274) by fusion with a following y sound, when it is preceded by a vowel in an accented syllable; as in vi′şion, de-ci′şion, ad-he′şion, sua′şion, ex-plo′şion, confu′şion, pleaş′ure, lei′şure, viş′u-al, u′şu-ry, etc.; also in sciş′ion, re-sciş′ion.

SH.

§ 261. This digraph, — as in sharp, shine, rash, usher, — represents a surd sibilant (§ 203) made between tongue and palate at a place farther back than the s. It is commonly reckoned as a simple element. But the description by Brücke seems more accurate, which makes it to be a composite element, consisting of an open s sound made at the point or front edge of the tongue and, as simultaneous therewith, a breath sound made farther back, and like the German ch in ich. The sh in English takes more commonly a slightly diphthongal character, with the s constituent more prominent in the initial portion and the simple breath sound in the terminal portion.

The sound is otherwise represented by c or s with or before e or i, and by t or sc with or before i (§§ 97, 106); by s, sometimes, before u (§§ 134, 135, 259); as involved in the x in anxious, luxury, etc.; by ch in chaise, etc.; by chs in fuchsia; and by sch in schorl, schottische, from the German.

T.

§ 262. This is the dental surd mute (§§ 178, 185); as in tie, it, note, try, tune, twine, stay, last, apt, sent, act, salt, etc. For the sound of t in different situations, see §§ 185–194. For ti sounded as sh in nation, etc., and as ch in question, see § 106.

The sound is represented by bt, ct, th, cht, ght, phth; as in doubt, indict, thyme, yacht, night, phthisic, etc.; also by the verb inflection -ed after surd elements other than t (§§ 96, 229). The t is silent in Matthew, mortgage, hautboy, chasten, hasten, often, listen, etc.; but in chasten, etc., it causes an abrupt beginning of the n (§ 158).

TH.

§ 263. This digraph is used to represent two linguadental fricative sounds (§§ 178, 179, 198, 199): a surd and a sonant; both made with the same articulative position: — the surd, as in thin, enthusiasm, breath, birth, etc.; the sonant, marked Th, th, as in the, this, then, with, breathe, bathe, etc.

§ 264. In the following nouns, as exceptional cases, the th is surd in the singular and sonant in the plural: — bath, cloth, lath, mouth, oath, path, wreath, moth; pl. baths, cloths, etc. Verb and noun forms differ: — the verb sonant, the noun surd; as, breathe, breath; wreathe, wreath; bathe, bath; mouth, mouth.

Th has the sound of t in thyme, Thomas, Thames, Esther, and, with ph, in phthisic; it is commonly silent in isthmus and asthma.

V.

§ 265. This is a labio-dental fricative element (§§ 178, 199), the sonant correlative of the surd f; as in vain, vivid, ever, live, lived, move, moves, calves, wolves, etc. The sound is taken by f in of (§ 230); but in pronouncing its compounds, hereof, etc., usage is divided between v and f.

A softened v sound can be produced by the lips alone, and is quite commonly given in this way by Germans, as it is so in their language, represented by w.

W.

§ 266. This is a labial sonant fricative (§§ 178, 199); as in we, worse, inward, twelve, swan, etc. When not silent, w is always followed by a vowel in the same syllable. It is sometimes represented by u before another vowel: as in quail, language, persuade, etc. Preceded by s, the w may be regarded as forming, in conjunction with the following vowel, an impure diphthong (§ 19 b); as in swan, persuade; but, preceded by a t, d, k, or hard g or an h sound, it forms, in conjunction with the consonant, a compound, or diphthongal, element (§§ 212, 213).

§ 267. W is called a semivowel (§ 205) from its close relation to the vowel o͞o (fo͞od, § 126) or o͝o (fo͝ot, § 128). It always actually begins with a brief o͞o or o͝o sound. The position of the organs is the same for both the vowel and the consonant; the tense condition for the vowel making the chief difference, — as may be tested in the words woo, woe, war. As for o͞o, o͝o, so for w, there is not only a contraction of the lips, but there is also a constriction between the back tongue and the soft palate, which is as essential for the consonant as it is for the vowel. So that w is a guttural as well as a labial consonant.

§ 268. After a vowel in the same syllable, the w as a consonant is silent; but, after long o as in glow, thrown, it may be regarded as in some sort representative of the vanish of that vowel (§ 109). In some cases it has more significance; as in awe, law (§ 70); the digraph ew is the equivalent of long u (§ 131); as in dew, few, etc.; and ow, of ou; as in cow, town (§ 129). W is silent before r in the same syllable; as in wring, wrote, etc.; also in answer, sword, toward, two, and in who, whoop, etc. For the diphthongal consonant wh in when, etc., see § 212.

X.

§ 269. This letter has two sounds: a surd (ks) and a sonant (gz).

§ 270. (1.) The surd, — as in box, wax, execute, exodus, extreme, excellent, exhortation, etc., — is to be regarded as a diphthongal consonant; — see § 217. X, as preceding an accented syllable (§ 271), is exceptionally surd (ks) in ax-il′la, ex-ar′chate, exude′, hex-am′e-ter, ox-al′ic, and a few other words. In words such as anxious, noxious, luxury, the s component of the x becomes sh by fusion with a following y sound. — See §§ 106, 135, 259.

§ 271. (2.) X is, with few exceptions (§ 270), sonant (gz) when followed by an accented syllable that begins with a vowel, or by a silent h and an accented vowel; as in exist, exalt, example, exert, exotic, exhaust, exhibit, exhilarate, etc.; and the derivatives of such words often retain the sound with the x falling under the accent; as in ex′em-pla-ry, ex′emp-tī′tious, etc.

At the beginning of words, x has the sound of z; as in xanthic, xebec, xylography, and retains this sound in some compounds.

Y.

§ 272. Y, as a consonant, is a palatal sonant fricative element (§§ 179, 199); as in year, you, young, beyond, vineyard, etc. It is classed with w as a semivowel (§ 205). The letter y originally represented a vowel sound of the mixed order, and nearly related to ē (ēve) or ĭ (ĭll); it had this sound in the Anglo-Saxon. As commonly and properly pronounced in modern English, it begins with a brief sound of one or the other of these vowels. It is an uncouth style of utterance that omits this initial sound. In many words this consonant is descended from an Anglo-Saxon g hard; in others, from a vowel. In certain cases the sound is represented by an i from which it has been developed; as in pontiard, onion, genial, familiar, etc. (§ 106); and in like manner by e (§ 97); and it forms a part of the vowel ū (ūse); — see § 19 b. The place of articulation for this consonant extends further back than does the place of constriction for the vowel ē (ēve), involving the soft palate, as the place for ē does not.

Y, as a consonant, occurs only at the beginning of a syllable: at the end or in the middle, it is a vowel; as in my, happy, eye. It is used in this Dictionary in giving the pronunciation of some foreign words, as fiord, lorgnette, camarilla, etc.; and, in such case, is not restricted to the beginning of a syllable.

Z.

§ 273. The ordinary z is a sonant fricative (§ 199) and is ranked as a sibilant (§§ 202, 203); as in zeal, zone, maze, size. frozen, dizzy, buzz, etc.; the sound is often represented by s; as in easy, his, ears, etc. (§ 257); sometimes by c; as in suffice, etc. (§ 221). It is the sonant correlative of the surd s (§ 256).

§ 274. In some words, z takes a sound (zh) which is the sonant correlative of the surd sh; as in azure, seizure, grazier; developed by fusion of a proper z with a following y sound (§§ 106, 135; cf. § 260). The sound is otherwise represented by si in fusion, etc.; by ti, exceptionally, in transition; and by g in rouge, manége, mirage, and other words from the French.

§ 275. SYLLABICATION.

(A.) A SYLLABLE consists usually of two or more speech elements following in succession and combined together into a unity made by the singleness of the impulse exerted in their utterance. The singleness of the impulse being the essential thing, one element alone, such as can be sounded by itself, will suffice; as, I, eye, ah, oh, i-o-ta, or continuity of the sound may even be broken by a brief interval of silence; as it is in spry, stay, sky, apse, apt, its, ax, act.

Two consecutive syllables in a word or phrase are made with two separate impulses. They are not, however, ordinarily separated by a "rest" consisting of an absolute pause. Instead of this, we commonly have simply a remission, or weakening, a relaxation, of the stress at the end of the first syllable, succeeded by a fresh impulse for the one that follows. The difference between the ä-ĭ in nä-ĭve, or nä-ĭf, and the ī in knīfe, consists wholly in the different distribution of stress, and of quantity, among the different parts of the sound.

Every one of what we call unaccented syllables receives a separate though comparatively weak impulse; and this even when two or more such syllables occur in succession; as in trav′el-er, va′ri-a-ble, va′ri-a-ble-ness.

PARTITION OF ELEMENTS. It is to be premised that every speech element of the kind commonly represented by single characters, — sometimes by digraphs, — has a beginning, a middle, and an end; the three parts differing from each other more or less in quality, — though the difference is more clearly marked in some cases than in others. When one of the mutes, p, t, k, or b, d, hard g, comes after another element, the organs close upon each other, remain closed for an instant, usually open again, and do so of necessity if another sound immediately follows; and each of these stages makes its particular impression on the hearer; — see § 185. Every speech element takes on a glide to or from others with which it is associated in a syllable, word, or phrase; and may thus present a beginning, middle, and end.

The syllabic division may sometimes fall, by remission of stress, between such portions of an element (making loose junction in the case of equally accented syllables, and weak junction in the case of unequally accented syllables); or on the middle part of a consonant, or somewhere within it making, whether orthographically doubled or represented by a single letter, close junction with vowels or other elements on each side.

One or another of the parts of the consonant will be brought out more or less prominently according to the situation it has in the syllable or word. A scrupulous discrimination between weak junction and loose junction is not in all cases practically necessary.

In the case of consecutive unaccented syllables with a consonant between the vowels, it is often almost a matter of indifference, so far as concerns the pronunciation in ordinary speech, whether the consonant sound be regarded as attached more closely or prominently to the preceding or to the following syllable.

The ORTHOGRAPHIC DOUBLING of a consonant that makes a part of two adjoining syllables is apt to have an effect upon the pronunciation in quite deliberate speech, even when, in the ordinary manner of utterance, no difference will be made from cases in which the consonant is written single; as in ditty, scatter, compared with city, atom. The consonant is therefore in such case repeated in the respelling for pronunciation.

(B.) The NATURE AND KIND OF THE VOWELS which form the core of the syllables composing a word is the leading factor in determining the syllabic division of the word. It is this on which depends the kind of junction a vowel makes with the consonant that immediately follows between it and the vowel of the next following syllable; and it is this which, in so doing, goes far to determine the main questions that arise concerning syllabic division made on the basis of pronunciation.

LONG VOWELS. Any one of the "regular long" (§ 22) vowels, ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, besides ä (ärm) and ą (ąll) and the diphthongs oi, ou, — when followed by one or more consonants between it and the vowel of the next following syllable, — makes naturally a loose junction with the adjoining consonant; as in tā-per, drä-ma, Hē-brew, wą-ter, ō-men, tū-mor, etc. But this is impossible when we have two or more consonants not capable of beginning the following syllable; as in ān-gel, cām-bric, in the case of n, l, or v, followed by i with a y sound (§ 106); as in āl-ien, gēn-ius, ūn-ion, etc., and in case of st; as in hās-ty, Eas-ter.

SHORT VOWELS. All the "regular short" (§ 23) vowels, ă, ĕ, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ, besides å (åsk) and ụ (fụll), or o͝o (fo͝ot), when accented, make the division come after a following consonant; as, hăb′it, ha-bĭt′u-al, prŏph′et, pro-phĕt′ic, lĭv′id, săc′rament, lĭs′ten, etc. Also, — except ĭ, ụ, or o͝o, and å, as explained below, — they all do the same when unaccented; as, ăt-tack′, ĕx-act′, sys′tĕm-at′ĭc, rec′ŏl-lect′, etc. But a different division is to be made when the consonant with the following vowel has the sound of sh or zh or j; as rā′tion-al, spē′cial, of-fī′cial, vĭ′sion, re-lĭ′gion, etc.

Unaccented vowels which may make loose junction with a following consonant are the ĭ and ụ, or o͝o, or ů as including the o͝o sound, and å; as in am′ĭ-ty, vis′ĭ-ble, rụ-gose′, sů-pe′ri-or, mů-nif′i-cent, di′å-dem, å-board′, etc. The neutral vowel, also, makes loose junction, when in rapid speech the others fall into it (§ 17). They all usually make the loose junction when the consonant or consonants are capable of beginning the following syllable. But sometimes, in initial syllables, the ĭ takes so much stress as to throw the division over to the other side; as in ĭm-ag′ine, dĭs-ease′. Also, ĭ attracts and detaches s from a following consonant; as in min′ĭs-ter, con′sĭs-tō′ri-al, mag′is-trate, etc. The obscure e (§§ 90, 91) and a (§ 69) take with them the following l, m, or n, etc.; as in nov′el-ist, mac-ad′am-ize, al′ien-ate, rav′en-ous, etc. The ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, are noticed above in the paragraph under the head of Long Vowels.

The vowels always followed by r, namely, â (câre), ē (fērn), or ĭ (sĭr), ê (evêr), ô (ôrb), and û (ûrn), are always in close junction with that consonant, whether accented or unaccented; as in pâr′ent, sēr′vant, sev′ēr-al, vīr′tue, ôr′dēr, mûr′mur, etc.

TWO OR MORE CONSONANTS TOGETHER. Certain successions of elements can not, in English speech at least, be employed without intervening remission of stress. When two or more consonants come between vowels, four different cases arise : —

1. The consonants may be capable of combining with a following but not with a preceding vowel. In this case, if the preceding vowel is of a kind that favors loose junction, the division will come upon the vowel; as in Ā′pril, hā′tred, sā′cred, prē-scribe′, Mal′ī-bran, å-broad′, sū-preme′, etc. If the vowel requires close junction, the division can come only between consonants; as in Căp′ri-corn, pĕt′ri-fy, măd′ri-gal, min′is-try, etc.; since the two consonants can not end a syllable.

2. The consonants may be capable of combining with a preceding but not with a following vowel; and thus of ending but not of beginning a syllable. The division cannot thus come on the preceding vowel, and comes more naturally between consonants; as in vēr′dure, sur-rĕn′der, ān′gel, ĕn-dure′, etc.; but, out of regard to etymological structure, may be allowed to come on the following vowel; as in hōld-ing, build-er, etc.

3. The consonants may be capable of either beginning or ending a syllable; and thus the division may take now one, and now another, of the three possible positions; as in bē-stow, dē-spair, màs-ter, dis-pense, råsp-ing, åsk-ing, hās-ty, hāst-ing, boast-ing.

4. The consonants may not together combine with a vowel so as to be able either to begin or to end a syllable; and the division must of necessity come somewhere between consonants; as in bŭt-ler, first-ling, cŏn-strain, hōl-ster, Cām′bridge, etc.

Etymological Ground of Division. The pronunciation of words is often influenced by a regard to the etymological structure; and thus the syllabic division will to a certain extent be determined by etymology, though based upon pronunciation, — the principles above explained allowing a certain liberty of variation. Thus, what would more naturally be mā-ker, keeping, swee-ter, wạn-ting, mēl-ting, trŭs-ty, is readily and properly pronounced māk-er, keeping, sweet-er, wạnt-ing, mēlt-ing, trŭst-y, etc. Thus, instead of tran-smit, tran-sact, we have trans-mit, trans-act. Vowel sound itself will sometimes be modified with reference to the etymology.

Prefixes and suffixes which are universally and obviously recognizable as such, may properly be kept separate and entire. But this principle may better be restricted to derivatives in which the spelling and the pronunciation (with the accentuation) remain as they were in the original words; as is not the case in ăb′stī-nĕnce, from ăb-stain′; prĕs′ī-dĕnt, from prē-sīde′; in′cī-dĕn′tal, from in′cī-dent, etc.; and further, to those cases in which the meaning of the original is carried fully and plainly into the derivative, without deviation by specialization or otherwise; as is not the case in trus-tee, from trust; even-tual, from event; trea-tise, from treat, etc. In the cases in which a suffix is preceded by a long vowel under merely secondary stress, the more natural way of pronunciation is followed, in this Dictionary, in disregard of the etymology; as in e-man′ci-pā′tor, or′gan-ī′zer, a-cid′u-lā′ted, an′te-dā′ted; while the etymology is followed in the case of a long vowel, so situated and under a primary accent; as in hāt′er, bap-tīz′er, dāt′ed, con′tra-vēn′ing, etc.

Since the intent and purpose of written words is to represent speech, there is really no good reason for allowing etymology to control syllabic division, in ordinary writing and print, in any other way than indirectly through its influence on the customary pronunciation. There are those, in England more than in this country, who divide according to etymology, in despite of pronunciation; but the prevailing custom is to follow the etymological division only so far as it may not absolutely conflict with that which fairly represents pronunciation.

ORTHOGRAPHY,

OBSERVATIONS.

The English language, being chiefly the offspring of two parent languages very different in form and spirit, and having been considerably modified in its growth by various other tongues, contains very many anomalies; and in no particular are these anomalies more numerous and striking than in its orthography and its orthoëpy. The spelling of Anglo-Saxon and Norman-French was largely phonetic; but by reason of the numerous local or dialectic variations in pronunciation neither of these languages showed any great regularity in orthography. When, therefore, the vocabularies of these two languages, widely different both in their orthographical structure and their phonological character, were combined, the result was a language in which the orthography shows extreme irregularity. The signs representing sounds have been so multiplied, that many of the letters are pronounced in several different ways, and the letters, or combinations of letters, for a single sound in some cases amount to scores. Indeed, it is computed that many words of two syllables may be spelled in several thousand different ways, by the use of combinations employed in other words in the language with the same sound value. The word scissors, for instance, may be thus written, as is computed by Ellis, in nearly six thousand different ways. Of course, comparatively very few of these possible forms of spelling are ever employed in the case of any one word; yet the words in respect to which even the most careful writers are at variance are thousands in number, and those in which an orthography contrary to analogy has been universally adopted are equally numerous.

Unsettled and variable as is the orthography of the present day, however, it is order itself compared with that of a few centuries ago. It would, of course, be unreasonable to expect that there should be any general correspondence of orthographical forms in the works of different authors before the types of the printer gave prominence to certain forms, which finally became recognized as standards; and manuscripts prove that the utmost license prevailed in spelling words. Even proper names, which would naturally receive more attention, and be written with more care than any other class of words, are found in multitudes of forms, several variations being sometimes found in the same manuscript or work. Lower states that the family of Mainwaring has the extraordinary number of one hundred and thirty-one variations of that single name, all drawn from authorized documents; but this is an extreme case. There were, however, some writers who were attentive to the matter of spelling. For instance, the spelling of the Ormulum, which was written in the thirteenth century, though strange and cumbrous, is very remarkable for its regularity; and the author strenuously urges his copyists to follow his orthography with the utmost exactness.

The invention of printing commenced a new era, though for a long time even this had little effect to fix the exterior form of the language. Indeed, much of the perverse orthography of books printed two or three centuries ago is to be attributed to the printer, who often inserted or expunged letters as the length of the lines or convenience of spacing required. It is no uncommon thing to find, in the works of Chaucer, Spenser, and other early writers, or in books printed two or three centuries ago, the same words occurring in several different forms upon the same page. Even as late as the time of Shakespeare, orthography was very unsettled; and his name was written in more than thirty different ways. In the writings of Wyclif, Chaucer, and other early authors, the forms of words were frequently varied by the remnants of the Semi-Saxon inflection, which have since entirely disappeared.

The irregularities found in early books, though continuing for so long a time, were neither unnoticed nor looked upon with indifference. Not only have various scholars advocated changes in a great number of particular points, but numerous complete systems for the reformation of orthography have been proposed. Sir Thomas Smith, Secretary of State to Queen Elizabeth, William Bullokar, Dr. Gill, Master of St. Paul's School, in London, and Charles Butler all devised schemes of reformed orthography, aiming essentially to reduce the spelling of words to uniform principles so as to make it practically phonetic.

In the time of Charles I., many changes were introduced; and it was very common, even among eminent scholars, to spell words according to their pronunciation, omitting such letters as were deemed superfluous. These attempts at improvement were made upon no settled or uniform principles, and had little or no permanent effect upon the language. Another elaborate plan was proposed, in the seventeenth century, by Bishop Wilkins, similar in its general character to those of Smith, Bullokar, etc.

The celebrated Dictionary of Dr. Samuel Johnson, first published in 1755, has contributed more than any work written, either before or since, to fix the external form of the language and to diminish the number of irregularities; for though numerous inconsistencies and many oversights are to be found in it, the learning of the author, and the sound judgment and practical wisdom which he displayed, gave it at once an authority which it has not yet entirely lost; and the orthography of the present day, though it has received some important modifications since his time, is substantially the same as that of his dictionary. The changes in the spelling of words, introduced by Dr. Johnson, were generally made in order to restore the ancient orthography, or to remove some anomaly. Perhaps the most important office performed by his work was that it settled usage definitely in favor of some one of the numerous forms in which many words were written, thus removing the cause of much confusion. Among the most prominent alterations made by him were the restoration of k to many words which had long been written without it, as in musick, rhetorick, and the like, and the insertion of u in the termination of many words which previously ended in or, as in ancestour, authour, errour, and others. The former of these changes was not followed by subsequent writers; the latter, as it was thought to be justified by the analogy of the corresponding termination eur in the French (through which language were derived from Latin many, perhaps a majority, of the words affected by the change), was generally followed. Johnson's practice in this respect, however, was not in harmony with his theory; for he wrote only about half the words of this class with the ending our, leaving the rest in or, though for no reason that would not equally apply to them all. Yet this notable inconsistency was not only overlooked, but was perpetuated, and still exists in the orthography of English writers. In the United States a different practice prevails, as will presently be mentioned.

The scheme of Pinkerton, who, in 1785, under the name of Robert Heron, proposed to render the language more euphonious by adding vowels to words ending in consonants, and by pronouncing the silent final vowels of others, in a manner perfectly arbitrary, is too ridiculous to deserve further mention. About twenty years later another absurd plan was published by Elphinstone, who printed a book in order to introduce it, but without success. During the eighteenth century, several English divines, as Lardner, Benson, and others, employed in many words methods of spelling peculiar to themselves, chiefly such as had long been abandoned, as the writing of ie for final y; the adding of e to words ending in ss; and the use of such forms as præface, persue, procede, sais (for says), and the like. So also Mitford used many singular forms, such as iland, intire, endevor, meer (for mere), tho (for though), spred, etc. It is proper to mention here also the innovations of Archdeacon Hare, in the nineteenth century, who, on the ground of pronunciation, etymology, and analogy, employed in his work, such forms as atchieve, compell, enure, firy (for fiery), forein, invey (for inveigh), highth, plouhman, smugler, and the like. He not only omitted the hyphen in many compound words where it has been usually inserted, but also advocated the omission of the apostrophe in the possessive case, and the substitution of t for ed in those preterits in which the latter termination is pronounced like t; as in exprest, fixt, publisht, etc., for expressed, fixed, published, etc. This substitution of t for ed, however, is not peculiar to Hare, since it accords with the usage of the early writers and of many, both poets and prose writers, in later times. The use of the hyphen, also, in compound words, has not even yet been settled.

Besides the imperfect attempts mentioned above, many plans have been devised, at different times, for reducing the spelling of words to uniformity and simplicity, by a complete reform in the method of representing the sounds of words by written characters; that is, by employing a new alphabet in which each sign stands for one, and only one, definite sound, and each sound is represented by one, and only one, character. Such a method of spelling was invented by Dr. Franklin, in the eighteenth century, though he never brought it to perfection, and scarcely used it, except in a brief correspondence with a friend. The most recent, and in every respect the most comprehensive and philosophical, scheme of this kind, is that of which Mr. A. J. Ellis, of Cambridge, England, has been the most prominent advocate and representative, and to a large extent the inventor. The alphabet in this system contains about forty characters, each of which represents but a single sound, so that a word written according to this method could properly be pronounced in only one way. Although this system has received great publicity, and has had many earnest supporters, it has been found too nice in its distinctions to gain ground in the public favor, and has finally been abandoned by its author as a means of reforming orthography. The schemes of Lepsius, Müller, and others who have endeavored to form philosophical alphabets of universal application, are hardly to be mentioned here, as they are but indirectly related to English orthography.

In 1828, Dr. Webster published his Dictionary of the English Language, and the changes in spelling advocated by him have had much influence upon orthography, especially in the United States. These changes were advocated by him chiefly on the ground of etymology and of analogy, from a desire to make the words correspond, as far as practicable, with their primitive forms, so as to reveal more clearly their etymological affinities, and also to reduce as much as possible the number of anomalies and exceptional cases. Of the words whose orthography had been changed for the former reason, many were restored to their ordinary forms by Dr. Webster himself in the second edition of his work, published in 1841, and others still were restored in subsequent editions. The alterations of the second class have been received with favor and adopted by a large portion of the writers in the United States, and by some authors also in England.

Many of Dr. Webster's deviations from the usage of his time were not innovations, but restorations of older forms which were once very generally used. The most important points in which his orthography differs from that of most other modern lexicographers, and in reference to which there is still difference of usage among scholars, are stated in the following list, in which the numbers refer to the sections of the Rules for Spelling Certain Classes of Words (see below), where the cases are mentioned particularly. These are, the not doubling the final consonant in derivatives of words like travel, worship, etc. (§ 8); doubling the l in installment, enrollment, etc. (§ 9); doubling the final letter in such words as fulfill, instill, etc. (§ 16); retaining the i in derivatives of villain (§ 27); writing defense, offense, etc., for defence, offence, etc., and practice for practise (§ 27); writing the termination -er for -re in words like center, meter, etc. (§ 31); writing mold and molt without u (§ 34). With regard to words often written with the termination -re, which in this book are spelled with two endings, -er and -re, it may be further remarked that the use of -er, as in meter, etc., is a restoration of the older spelling; and the same is true of the substitution of the termination -or for -our.

RULES FOR SPELLING CERTAIN CLASSES OF WORDS,

FOUNDED ON THE ORTHOGRAPHY OF DR. WEBSTER, AS EXHIBITED IN THIS VOLUME.

§ 1. The letters f and l, at the end of monosyllables, and standing immediately after single vowels, are generally doubled: as in staff, cliff, puff; all, bell, hill, toll. The words clef, if, of, nil, and sol, are exceptions.

§ 2. The letter s, at the end of a monosyllable, and standing immediately after a single vowel, is generally doubled, except when — e. g., in o's, spade's, tones, loves, has, is, was, etc. — it is used to form the possessive case or plural of a noun, or the third person singular of a verb; as in grass, press, hiss, moss, truss. The only important exceptions are as, gas, yes, gris, his, this, thus, plus, bus (for omnibus), thus, and us.

§ 3. Besides f, l, and s, the only consonants that are ever doubled at the end of a word are b, d, g, m, n, p, r, t, and z. Most of the words in which these letters are doubled, including some spelled more or less with a single consonant, are: abb, ebb; add, odd, wadd (Min.), rudd; egg, bigg, mumm (to mask); Ann, inn, Finn, wynn, sunn (Bot.); Lapp, wapp; parr, err, birr, shirr, dorr, burr, purr; brett, frett, bitt (Naut.), mitt, smitt, butt; fizz, frizz, buzz, fuzz.

Note. — The words let, net, and set are sometimes incorrectly spelled lett, nett, and sett; and some other words which should have the final letter single are spelled, by some writers, with it doubled.

§ 4. A consonant at the end of a word immediately after a diphthong or double vowel is rarely doubled. The words ail, peat, haul, door, and maim, are examples.

The words feoff, enfeoff, gneiss, speiss are exceptions. The word guess is only an apparent exception, as the u does not strictly form a diphthong with the e, but serves merely to render the g hard.

§ 5. Monosyllables which are pronounced with a final k sound, and have c following the final vowel, have usually k added after the c; as in black, fleck, click, knock, and buck. Exceptions are bac, lac, sac, tac, talc, zinc, ploc, roc, soc, arc, marc, orc, torc, disc, and fisc.

Words of more than one syllable, ending in -ic or -iac, which formerly ended in ck, also words derived from the Latin or Greek, or from other sources, and similar to these, or formed in an analogous manner, are now written without the k; as, maniac, elegiac, zodiac, cubic, music, public. The word derrick is an exception. Words of more than one syllable, in which c is preceded by other vowels than i or ia, commonly end in ck; as arrack, barrack, hammock, hillock, wedlock. The words almanac, carac, sandarac, rebec, xebec, manioc, havoc, are exceptions. Almanac, rebec, and havoc, however, are sometimes written with k after the c, especially in England; and carac is oftener written carack or carrack.

§ 6. In derivatives formed from words ending in c, by adding a termination beginning with e, i, or y, the letter k is inserted after the c, in order that the latter may not be inaccurately pronounced like s before the following vowel: as, colic, colicky; traffic, trafficked, trafficking, trafficker; physic, physicked; zinc, zincked, zincking, zincky. We find also zinc'ing, zinc'ite, zink'y (as from zink) etc., not conformed to this rule.

§ 7. In derivatives formed by adding a termination beginning with a vowel to monosyllables and words accented on the last syllable, when these words end in a single consonant (except h and x) preceded by a single vowel, that consonant is doubled: as, clan, clan'nish; plan, planned, plan'ning, plan'ner; bag, bag'gage; hot, hot'ter, hot'test; wit, wit'ty; cabal', cabal'ler; begin', begin'ning, begin'ner; infer', inferred', infer'ring; squab, squab'bish, squab'by; squat, squat'ting, squat'ter; quit, quit'ted, quit'ting. The consonant is doubled in these words in order to preserve the short sound of the vowel, as otherwise the vowel would be likely to be pronounced long.

The derivatives of the word gas (except gas'sing and gas'sy) are written with but one s; as, gas'eous, gas'ify. Excellence, as being from the Latin excellens, retains the double l, though one l has been dropped from the termination of excel'. Besides these, the chief exceptions to the rule are those derivatives in which the accent of the primitive is thrown back upon another syllable: as, cabal', cab'alism, cab'alist; prefer', pref'erence; refer', ref'erence; defer', def'erence. But infer'able, transfer'able are common exceptions. It is no exception to this rule that chancellor, and the derivatives of metal and crystal, as metalloid, metallurgy, crystalline, crystallize, and the like, are written with the l doubled, since they are derived respectively from the Latin cancellarius (through the French), and metallum, and the Greek κρύσταλλος. So also the word tranquillity retains the double l, as being from the Latin tranquillitas, while the English derivatives of tranquil, though often written with two l's, are more properly written with only one, as tranquilize, tranquilizer, and the like.

§ 8. When a diphthong, or a digraph representing a vowel sound, precedes the final consonant of a word, or when the accent of a word ending in a single consonant falls on any other syllable than the last, or when the word ends in two different consonants, the final consonant is not doubled in derivatives formed by the addition of a termination beginning with a vowel: as, daub, daubed, daub'er; need, need'y; brief, brief'er, brief'est; trav'ail, trav'ailed, trav'ailing; rev'el, rev'eled, rev'eling; trav'el, trav'eling, trav'eler; prof'it, prof'ited; act, act'ed, ac'tor; perform', perform'er; stand, stand'ing.

The final consonant is doubled in the derivatives of a few words ending in g, in order to diminish the liability to its being pronounced like j, before e or i: as, hum'bug', hum'bugged', hum'bug'ging; per'iwig, per'iwigged. The derivatives of kid'nap', which properly has a secondary accent on the final syllable, are spelled with or without the p doubled; as, kid'naped' or kid'napped', kid'nap'ing or kid'nap'ping, kid'nap'er or kid'nap'per. The word woolen is more generally thus written, in the United States, with one l; but in England it is written wool'len.

Note. — There is a large class of words ending in a single consonant, and accented on some other syllable than the last, the final consonants of which are, by very many writers and lexicographers, doubled in their derivatives, unnecessarily and contrarily to analogy. These words are chiefly those ending in l, with also a few of other terminations. The following list, the words in which are chiefly verbs, includes the most important of those in regard to which usage varies: namely, apparel, barrel, bevel, bias, bowel and its compounds, cancel, carburet and all similar words ending in -uret, cavil, carol, channel, chisel, counsel, cudgel, dial, dishevel, dowel, drivel, duel, empanel, enamel, equal, funnel, gambol, gravel, grovel, handsel, hatchel, imperil, jewel, kennel, kidnap, label, laurel, level, libel, marshal, marvel, metal (see § 7), medal, model, panel, parallel, parcel, pencil, peril, pistol, pommel, quarrel, ravel, revel, rival, rowel, shovel, shrivel, snivel, tassel, tinsel, trammel, travel, tunnel, unravel, vial, victual, worship. Worcester doubles the final letters of all these words, except parallel, in forming derivatives by the addition of terminations beginning with vowels, though he remarks, with respect to those ending in l, that "it better accords with the analogy of the language" to spell their derivatives with but one l. Smart retains the double consonant in this class of words solely on the ground that usage favors it, but remarks that "the double p in worshipped, worshipper, etc., the second l in travelling, traveller, etc., are quite unnecessary on any other score than to satisfy the prejudices of the eye." Stormonth doubles the final consonant in this class, except in the derivatives of channel, dial, parallel, pistol, and in some of those from equal, peril, quarrel, victual, worship. The Imperial agrees with Stormonth in respect to derivatives of dial, equal, parallel, peril, pistol, victual, and most derivatives of worship; doubles the l in derivatives of channel; gives caroling or carolling as a noun, duellist and duelist, enamelar and enamellar, and so -er and -ist; has quarrellous and quarrelous — Stormonth giving only the latter, but both agreeing in quarrelled, quarrelling, quarreller, — while the Imperial increases the breach with trammeler and trammeller, worshipper and worshiper, gamboled or gambolled, gamboling or gambolling, etc. The Encyclopædic Dictionary gives both ways for derivatives of bias, channel (except channelize), drivel, ravel, etc.; but marks beveled and beveling as rare, and worshiper as obsolete; generally omits the participles, except in citations; and appears to favor the use of the double l, etc., in most of these derivatives. Perry wrote the derivatives of these words with but one l, according to the rule, and the same practice was advocated by Walker. Conformity to the regular rule has been advocated also by other eminent scholars; but, for the accommodation of the whole English-speaking public, both of the prevalent spellings are usually given in this Dictionary, that with the single consonant having the first place. See "A List of Words," after § 36.

§ 9. Derivatives formed from words ending in a double consonant, by adding one or more syllables, commonly retain both consonants: as, ebb, ebbing; odd, oddly; stiff, stiffness; fell, fellable; skill, skillful, skillfulness; will, willful, willfulness; dull, dullness; full, fullness. So also the double l is retained in the words installment, inthrallment, thralldom, and enrollment (from install, inthrall, thrall, and enroll), in order to prevent a false pronunciation if spelled with one l. Many writers and lexicographers, especially in England, omit one l in these words, as also in the derivatives of skill, will, dull, and full, formed by adding the syllables -ly and -ness. See §§ 16, 17.

The derivatives of pontiff are exceptions to the rule, being written with only one f; as, pontific, pontifical, pontificial, and the like. One l is also dropped in a few words formed by adding the termination -ly to words ending in ll, in order to prevent the concurrence of three l's: as, ill, illy; dull, dully; full, fully. Words similarly formed by adding the termination -less, however, are written either with the three l's, a hyphen being inserted before the termination, or with two l's, and without the hyphen; as, skill-less or skilless, smell-less or smelless.

§ 10. In derivatives formed from words ending with silent e, the e is generally retained when the termination begins with a consonant: as, pale, paleness; hate, hateful; incite, incitement; chaste, chastely, chasteness; move, movement. When, however, the e is immediately preceded by another vowel (except e), it is often dropped from the derivative: as, woe (sometimes wo), woful or woeful; due, duly; argue, argument; true, truly; awe, awful; and derivatives and compounds of these words.

The words wholly, nursling, wisdom, abridgment, acknowledgment, lodgment, judgment, and the compounds of some of these, are exceptions. The last four, however, are written, by many authors, abridgement, acknowledgement, lodgement, judgement.

§ 11. In derivatives formed from words ending with silent e, when the termination begins with a vowel, the e is generally omitted, except in the cases mentioned in the next paragraph: as, bride, bridal; plume, plumage; grieve, grievance; come, coming; move, movable; sale, salable; fleece, fleecy; force, forcible; true, truism.

The e is retained in the words hoeing, shoeing, and toeing (from hoe, shoe, and toe), in order to guard against mispronunciation, and is generally, for a like reason, excluded from shoer (cf. hoed, shod, toed). It is retained, also, in the words dyeing, singeing, springeing, swingeing, tingeing (from dye, singe, springe, swinge, tinge), to distinguish them from dying, singing, springing, swinging, tinging (from die, sing, spring, swing, ting). The word mileage, as commonly written, does not omit the e, though it is sometimes, and more correctly, spelled milage. The words lineage, lineal, and pineal, though apparently exceptions, are not really such, since they are derived not directly from line and pine, but from the Latin linea (through the French), linealis, and pinea. The e, standing, in a derivative, before a termination beginning with a or o, and immediately after c or g, is retained in order to prevent the pronunciation of these consonants with the hard sound: as, peace, peaceable; notice, noticeable; manage, manageable; change, changeable; advantage, advantageous; outrage, outrageous; mortgage, mortgageor. The last word is sometimes improperly written mortgagor, and pronounced mor'ga-jor'. Walker wrote moveable and saleable; Worcester gives only movable, salable, and usable; Smart and Stormonth give only movable and saleable, — which the Imperial and the Encyclopædic prefer; the Imperial and Stormonth give usable only; while the Encyclopædic marks salable, usable, and useable as obsolete.

§ 12. In derivatives formed from words ending in ie, by adding the termination -ing, the e is usually dropped, and the i changed to y, in order to prevent two i's from coming together: as die, dying; hie, hying — but Ash, Stormonth, and the Imperial write hieing; lie, lying; tie, tying; vie, vying.

§ 13. In derivatives of words ending in y preceded by a consonant, and formed by appending any termination except one beginning with i, the y is usually changed into i: as, icy, iciest, icily; mercy, merciless; tidy, tidiness; modify, modifies; pity, pitiful.

The derivatives of adjectives of one syllable ending in y preceded by a consonant, are exceptions, and usually retain the y: as, shy, shyness; sly, slyest; dry, dryly; spry, spryer, spryest; wry, wryness. But the adjectives drier and driest, from dry, are commonly written with i instead of y; and the forms drily, shily, slily, are not uncommon. Derivatives formed by adding the termination -ship, as secretaryship, suretyship, ladyship, and the like, also retain the y, though some authors write them with i, according to the rule. Derivatives in -like, as citylike, countrylike, and those formed from baby and lady, keep the y. The y is also retained in the possessive case of nouns, when formed by adding s with the apostrophe: as, country's, everybody's.

§ 14. Derivatives formed by affixing a termination to words ending in y preceded by a vowel, generally retain the y unchanged: as, gay, gayety, gayly; play, player, plays; sway, swayed; obey, obeying; joy, joyful; enjoy, enjoyed; buy, buying.

The words daily, laid, paid, said, saith, slain, and staid (from day, lay, pay, say, slay, and stay), with their compounds, are exceptions. Staid, however, is sometimes written stayed. Gaiety and gaily also occur. Says is regular in form, but not in pronunciation. Dewiness is a recognized exception. Derivatives from words ending in uy, as colloquies, from colloquy, are not exceptions to the rule, as u, in such cases, is not strictly a vowel, but stands for the consonant w.

§ 15. Derivatives formed by appending a syllable beginning with a vowel to words ending with a vowel sound, generally retain the letter or letters representing such sound: as, huzza, huzzaed; agree, agreeable, agreeing; weigh, weighing; dough, doughy; echo, echoed; woo, wooer; bow, bowed; beau, beauish. We sometimes see cooes, wooes (from the verbs coo, woo); but it is better to write coos, woos, with taboos, shampoos, and the like. Cf. Hindoos, etc., in § 18. Cooed and wooed are proper, like other participles in -ed.

Derivatives of words of this class ending in silent e, as also those formed from words ending in double e by adding a termination beginning with e, drop the final e: as, hoe, hoed; sue, sued: owe, owed; free, freer, freest; see, seer; oversee, overseer; agree, agreed, agreer. The cases mentioned in §§ 11, 12, and 13 are also exceptions.

§ 16. Derivatives formed by prefixing one or more syllables to words ending in a double consonant commonly retain the double consonant: as, tipstaff, rebuff, recall, befall, inthrall, disinthrall, foretell, undersell, fulfill, enroll, emboss (from staff, buff, call, fall, thrall, tell, sell, fill, roll, boss).

The word until is an exception, being always written with one l. Those words of this class which end in ll are written by some authors, especially in England, with one l; as, recal, befal, inthral, foretel, fulfil, enrol. The words distill and instill should be written with the l doubled, though they are often written distil and instil.

§ 17. Compounds of two or more words commonly retain all the letters of the simple words: as, stiff-necked, well-bred, dull-eyed, save-all, wide-mouthed.

There are numerous exceptions to this rule, many of them compounds which by long use have acquired the force of single words. They are the following: namely, some compounds of all and well; as, almighty, almost, alone, already, also, although, altogether, always, withal, therewithal, welcome, wherewithal, welfare; — compounds of mass; as, Candlemas, Christmas, Lammas, Michaelmas, etc.; — words of which the second part is the adjective full; as, artful, hateful, rueful, woeful or woful; — also, the words chilblain, dumfound, expire and its derivatives (cf. inspire), fulfill (see § 16), namesake, neckerchief, numskull, pastime, standish, where'er, and wherever.

§ 18. The plural of nouns regularly ends in s, or, in certain classes of words, in es.

When the noun in the singular ends with such a sound that the sound of s can unite with it, and be pronounced without forming a separate syllable, s only is added in forming the plural: as, bay, bays; shah, shahs; sea, seas; pie, pies; woe, woes; canto, cantos; virtue, virtues; purlieu, purlieus; claw, claws; panic, panics; bead, beads; chief, chiefs; bag, bags; path, paths; lock, locks; bell, bells; cup, cups; act, acts. A few plurals from nouns ending in o preceded by a consonant, end in es: as, echo, echoes; cargo, cargoes; embargo, embargoes; motto, mottoes; potato, potatoes. Other nouns of this class generally form their plurals regularly, though usage differs with regard to some of them. Those in which final o is preceded by a vowel form their plurals regularly: as, cameo, cameos; punctilio, punctilios. The plural of alkali is written alkalis or alkalies; that of rabbi, either rabbis or rabbies. With regard to other nouns ending in i usage differs, though they are more properly written with the termination is.

When the noun in the singular ends with such a sound (as that of ch in much, sh, j, s, x, or z) that the sound of s can not unite with it in pronunciation, but must form a separate syllable, e is inserted before s in forming the plural, unless the word ends with silent e, in which case the latter serves to form a separate syllable with s: as, church, churches; rush, rushes; age, ages; edge, edges; lace, laces; gas, gases; marquis, marquises; case, cases; loss, losses; box, boxes; maze, mazes. For classis, crisis, and like words, see § 25.

To express the plural of a letter, figure, or any character or sign, or of a word mentioned without regard to its meaning, the letter s, generally preceded by the apostrophe, is appended, as in the phrases, "The two l's in all;" "The two 0's in 400;" "Two 's* in Orion;" "He uses too many if's." Some writers, however, omit the apostrophe in such cases, joining the s immediately to the letter, character, or word, as in the phrases "The two ls in all;" "Two s* in Orion;" "His whys are well put." Still others write the names of the letters with their proper plural endings, instead of the letters themselves: as, the two ees, efs, ells, esses, and the like. The plurals of letters are also rarely expressed by simply doubling them: as, "The two ee in bee;" "The two ll in all;" but this practice is not to be commended, as ee, ll, etc., are properly read double e, double l, etc.

§ 19. Nouns, including proper names, ending in y preceded by a consonant form their plural by adding es and changing y into i: as, mercy, mercies; lady, ladies; sky, skies; army, armies; Mary, Maries. This rule includes words ending in quy, in which u, being pronounced like w, is strictly a consonant: as, colloquy, colloquies. In the case of proper names, however, many good writers form the plural by simply adding s: as, "The three Marys."

When the singular of a noun ends in y preceded by a vowel (except u having the power of w), the plural is regularly formed by adding s only: as, day, days; key, keys; money, moneys; monkey, monkeys; attorney, attorneys; alloy, alloys; guy, guys. Some plurals of this class are often, but less properly, written with the termination ies; as, monies, attornies, and the like.

NOTE. — Nouns now ending in y formerly ended in ie, and formed their plurals regularly by adding s; as, memorie, memories; mercie, mercies. Y was substituted for ie in the singular, but the plural retains its old form.

§ 20. The plurals of a few nouns ending in f or fe are irregularly formed by changing f or fe into ves. The following words, with their compounds, are the principal examples: namely, life, lives; knife, knives; wife, wives; leaf, leaves; sheaf, sheaves; loaf, loaves; beef, beeves; thief, thieves; calf, calves; half, halves; elf, elves; shelf, shelves; self, selves; wolf, wolves. The plural of staff is sometimes written staffs, but more commonly staves, except when it means a corps of officers, either military or civil, in which sense it is always written staffs. The plural of wharf is generally written wharfs in England; in the United States it is more commonly written wharves, as it is also by some recent English writers. The plural of scarf is scarfs, rarely scarves. The plurals of hoof and turf, formerly written hooves and turves, are now written hoofs and turfs. The plurals of other nouns ending in f, fe, or ff, are formed regularly by the addition of s only.

§ 21. In the following nouns, the singular and the plural differ in their vowels or vowel sounds: namely, man, men; woman, women; goose, geese; foot, feet; tooth, teeth; brother, brethren (see §§ 22, 23); louse, lice; mouse, mice. Compounds ending with these words form their plurals in the same manner: as, workman, workmen; dormouse, dormice. Words which end in the syllable -man, and are not compounds, form their plurals regularly, by adding s only: as, cayman, caymans; desman, desmans; firman, firmans; talisman, talismans; German, Germans; Mussulman, Mussulmans; Ottoman, Ottomans; Turcoman, Turcomans. The plurals of talisman and Mussulman are sometimes incorrectly written talismen and Mussulmen.

§ 22. A few plurals end in -en: namely, brother, brethren (see §§ 21, 23); child, children; ox, oxen. To these may be added the obsolete forms, eyen or eyne, kine, shoon, hosen, housen, sistren (from eye, cow, shoe, hose, house, sister), all of which end, as pronounced, with the sound of n.

§ 23. The words brother, die, pea, and penny, have each two plurals of different forms and with different significations; as, brothers, male children of the same parent, also members of the same society, association, class, or profession; brethren, members of the same religious or ecclesiastical body, the word in this form being rarely used except in connection with religion, or in scriptural language, where it also has the same meaning that brother has in ordinary language; dies, implements for making impressions by stamping, or for making screws, also the cubical parts of pedestals; dice, the cubical blocks used in games of chance; peas, seeds of the pea-plant, when a definite number is mentioned; pease, the same in bulk, or spoken of collectively; pennies, the coins, especially when a definite number is mentioned; pence, the amount reckoned by these coins. See also these words in the Dictionary.

§ 24. Some words, mostly names of animals, have the same form in the plural as in the singular; as, deer, sheep, swine, grouse, trout, and the like. This is true also of gentile nouns in -ese; as, Chinese, Portuguese, Tyrolese, Japanese. Fish, fowl, and some other words, may be used for an indefinite number; or the individuals may be designated as fishes, etc.

§ 25. Many words adopted from foreign languages retain their original plurals: as, datum, data; criterion, criteria; genus, genera; larva, larvæ; classis, classes (see class, pl. classes, in § 18); crisis, crises; matrix, matrices; focus, foci; monsieur, messieurs.

Many words of this class, while retaining the original plurals, have also a second, formed after the analogy of English words of similar termination: as, formula, formulæ or formulas; beau, beaux or beaus; focus, foci or focuses; index, indices or indexes; stratum, strata or stratums; bandit, banditti or bandits; cherub, cherubim or cherubs; seraph, seraphim or seraphs. The plurals of the last two words are sometimes incorrectly written cherubims and seraphims, with double plural terminations, since -im in Hebrew words is a plural ending.

§ 26. In certain loose compounds consisting of a noun followed by an adjective or other qualifying expression, the plural is commonly formed by making the same change in the noun as when it stands alone: as, court-martial, courts-martial; cousin-german, cousins-german; son-in-law, sons-in-law. When, however, the adjective is so closely joined to the noun that the compound has the force of a simple word, the plural of the compound is commonly formed like that of any other word of the same termination: as, cupful, cupfuls; handful, handfuls.

§ 27. There are many words, besides those mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, in respect to which usage, even that of the best authors, is variable. The most important of these words are mentioned in this and the succeeding sections.

The derivatives of the word villain, as villainess, villainy, etc., though often written villanous, villany, etc., properly retain the i, according to the practice of many writers, like those of other words similarly ending in -ain: as, mountainous, from mountain; captaincy, from captain; and the like.

The words connection, deflection, inflection, and reflection generally follow the spelling of the words connect, deflect, inflect, and reflect, though often written, esp. in England, connexion, deflexion, inflexion, and reflexion.

The word woe, though often written without the final e, should retain it, like most other nouns of one syllable and of similar form: as, doe, floe, foe, hoe, sloe, toe, and the like. Monosyllables other than nouns, and words of more than one syllable, having a similar termination, omit the e: as, do, go, no, so, canto, motto, potato.

The words defense, expense, offense, and pretense are properly written thus, though often spelled with c instead of s, for the s belongs to the words from which they are derived, and is used in all their derivatives.

The words drought and height were formerly written drouth and hight, and are still often so written in America.

The verb practice is written like the noun, in preference to the form practise, though the latter spelling is used by many writers, especially in England. The analogy of the language requires that the noun and verb which are pronounced alike should agree in spelling; and, therefore, the difference in spelling between the noun and the verb is properly observed, in words of this kind, only in such as are accented on the last syllable, as device, devise.

Derivatives of the Greek ἕδρα (seat, base, side; pronounced hĕd'rà), as polyhedron, tetrahedron, octahedral, and the like, are properly thus written with h before the e of the termination, but are sometimes written polyedron, tetraëdron, octaëdral, etc., without the h.

§ 28. There is a class of adjectives ending either in -able or in -ible, of which a large majority have the termination -able; as, blamable, laudable, legible, mutable, navigable, vendible. Many of them are from Latin words ending in -abilis or -ibilis; some are from the French; and not a few are formed by adding the termination to English words. Those from Latin words end respectively in -able or -ible, according as they are derived from words ending in -abilis or -ibilis: as, mutable (L. mutabilis); potable (L. potabilis); credible (L. credibilis); vendible (L. vendibilis). Those formed from English words generally end in -able: as, avoidable, eatable, fordable, laughable, liable, salable, serviceable. There are a few words respecting which usage is variable: as, addible or addable; conversable or conversible; inferable or inferrible; referable or referrible.

§ 29. There is a class of words beginning with en- or in-, as enclose or inclose, enquire or inquire, ensure or insure, and the like, many of which take either form of the prefix indifferently. They are chiefly derived from the Latin, either directly or through the French, the prefix in- belonging to the former language, and en- to the latter. In some of these words, en- is to be preferred; in others, in-; in many of them, either may be used indifferently. See the List of Words Spelled in Two or More Ways, and the different words of this class in the Dictionary.

§ 30. There was formerly considerable diversity of usage in respect to the terminations -ant and -ent, both of which were, in certain cases, used almost indifferently; as in the words confidant or confident, dependant or dependent, and the like. Present usage, however, is definitely settled in favor of one or the other form, in nearly or quite every word of this class, though not always upon uniform principles. Thus, the abstract noun confidence and the adjective confident are universal, while the common noun is sometimes the English confident, but often the French confidant. The abstract noun dependence and the adjective dependent have almost entirely superseded dependance and dependant. The noun dependant, which was at least as commonly seen in Walker's time as the noun dependent, has now yielded its place in great measure to dependent. On the other hand, we now have both the adjectives and the common nouns attendant and repentant; and the abstract nouns attendance and repentance. The terminations -ant and -ance belong properly to words derived from the French or from Latin verbs of the first conjugation; -ent and -ence to words derived from Latin verbs of the other three conjugations. -ence and -ance were also formerly confounded in some words, the one or the other being used indifferently.

§ 31. There is a class of words ending in -er, some of which are written by many authors with the termination -re: as, center, meter, theater, etc., which are often written centre, metre, theatre, etc. Acre, chancre, lucre, nacre, massacre, and ogre, retain the termination -re, in order to preserve the hard sound of the c and g. Still, we have the adjective eager, the noun eagre or eager, and the preposition mauger or maugre.

§ 32. There are two classes of chemical words ending respectively in -id or -ide and in -in or -ine, in regard to which usage has varied. Most of them were formerly written without the final e; but in present usage -ide is preferred to -id, and many make a technical distinction between -in and -ine. See -INE in the Dictionary (cf. § 104, Guide to Pronunciation). The word tannin is always written without the final e. Oxide is now generally written with the termination -ide.

§ 33. There is a class of words ending, as pronounced, with the sound of long i, followed by z, some of which are differently written, by different authors, with either -ize or -ise to represent this sound: as, criticize or criticise; civilize or civilise; naturalize or naturalise; patronize or patronise. These words are mostly verbs, and are chiefly derived from Greek words ending in -ιζειν (see -IZE, in the Dictionary), or from French words ending in -iser or -ise. There are a few from other sources, but formed in analogy with those derived from these languages. Those formed from Greek words properly have the termination -ize: as, anathematize, baptize, characterize, dramatize, tantalize. The spellings catechise, criticise, exorcise, are, however, in common use; but catechize and criticize are also allowed. Those formed in an analogous manner from English words are likewise written with -ize: as, albumenize, bastardize, memorize, sensitize. But those derived from the French verb prendre (participle pris or prise) end in -ise: as, apprise, comprise, emprise, enterprise, surprise. The following are the principal English verbs ending in -ise: namely, advertise, advise, affranchise, apprise, arise, catechise, chastise, circumcise, comprise, compromise, criticise, demise, despise, devise, disenfranchise, disfranchise, disguise, emprise, enfranchise, exercise, exorcise, franchise, merchandise, premise, revise, supervise, surmise, surprise. It may be remarked that most of those in respect to which usage varies are more frequently written in England with the termination -ise, and in the United States with the termination -ize.

§ 34. The words mold and molt, and their compounds and derivatives, are written in this Dictionary with o instead of ou, in analogy with the words bold, bolt, colt, gold, etc., from which the u has been dropped. Most authors, however, write these words mould and moult, and their derivatives in like manner; and this spelling is also given in this Dictionary as alternative.

§ 35. There is a numerous class of words almost universally written in the United States, with the termination -or, many of which are written in England with the termination -our: as, candor, favor, honor, labor, rumor, vigor. English usage, however, is not uniform with respect to these words, many of them being written with -or in English books. See the Observations on Orthography, prefixed to these rules.

§ 36. There is a small class of words ending with the syllable -ped (from Lat. pes, pedis, foot), the termination of some of which was formerly, and is still frequently, written -pede: as, biped, centiped, milliped, palmiped, quadruped, soliped, and the like. The words biped and quadruped are universally written without the final e; and most of the others, according to the best usage, should be so written. Centipede, however, is frequent; and velocipede is practically the only form in use.

A LIST OF WORDS SPELLED IN TWO OR MORE WAYS.

THE design of the following List is, in the first place, to present those words in reference to which present usage, in the United States or in England, sanctions more than one method of spelling the same word; and, secondly, a considerable number of words, which, though not differently spelled by living reputable writers, yet are to be found in the orthography of the second column in the works of respectable authors of the last century, or the early part of the present century, and are, therefore, often presented to the eye of the modern reader. Such a list, it is thought, will be found very convenient for consultation. For anything more full, a Glossary would be the appropriate resort. The first column, in the following List, presents the orthography recognized in the body of this Dictionary as the preferable one, or that in general use; the second column, one less desirable, or the usage of former times. Those forms in the second column which a good writer at the present day would not probably employ, but which are found only in writings of the past, have a dagger [†] prefixed. One class of words which might properly have been added, is, from their great number, omitted. It is that of words of more than one syllable ending in -ic or -ick; as, music, musick, public, publick, etc. It is deemed sufficient to mention the class, and to state that the termination in -ick is wholly disused. A similar remark is applicable to a portion of the words terminating formerly in -our, now in -or. Those of this class in the following List, in which both forms are given, are still sometimes used in both forms, the termination in -or being that most favored in the United States, while -our is the form generally preferred in England. Words of this class not given in the List are used only in -or by living writers. Subject to a like remark is a class of words terminating in -ize or -ise: as, systematize or systematise, etc., — the former mode, according to which such words are spelled in America, being in accordance with their etymology, and the latter that affected by English printers. When in this List the word in the first column is followed by or, as, "Abatis, or Abattis," it is thereby implied that the second form is in nearly, often quite, as good use as the first form.

Hetero-. [Gr. ἕτερος other.] Other; other than usual; different; as, *hetero*dox.

Hex-, Hexa-. [Gr. ἕξ six.] Six; sixfold; as, *hexa*pod, *hex*angular.

Holo-. [Gr. ὅλος whole.] Whole; complete; entire; as, *holo*graph, *holo*blast.

Homo-. [Gr. ὁμός the same.] One and the same; common; joint; similar; like; as, *homo*geneous.

Hydro-, Hydr-. [Gr. ὕδωρ water; whence E. *hydr*in hydrogen.] 1. Relating to water; as, *hydro*gen, *hydro*graphy. 2. Obtained by hydrogen; having hydrogen as an ingredient; — a chemical combining form; as, *hydro*carbon.

Hydroxy-. Having hydroxyl as an ingredient; — a chemical combining form, also sometimes used adjectively; as, hydroxy compounds.

Hyo-. Relating to the hyoid bone or arch; — an anatomical prefix; as, *hyo*mandibular.

Hyper-. [Gr. ὑπέρ above; akin to L. super, E. over.] 1. Over; above; too; abnormally great; excessive; as, *hyper*critical. 2. A chemical prefix equivalent to super- or per-. [Obs.] See Per-.

Hypo-. [Gr. ὑπό under; akin to L. sub.] 1. In a lower or inferior position, state, or degree; as, *hypo*tenuse, *hypo*thesis. 2. Having a low chemical valence; in a low state of oxidation; as, *hypo*phosphite, a phosphite containing phosphorus in a low state of oxidation.

I-. See Y.

Ideo-. [Gr. ἰδέα idea.] Relating to ideas, conceptions, representations, etc.; as, *ideo*graph.

Idio-. [Gr. ἴδιος proper, peculiar.] Private; personal; peculiar; distinct; as, *idio*syncrasy.

Il-. A form of In-.

Ilio-. Relating to, or connected with, the ilium; — an anatomical combining form; as, ilio-lumbar, pertaining to the iliac and the lumbar regions.

Im-. A form of In-.

In-. 1. [E. in, prep. and adv., or L. in; both akin to Gr. ἐν in.] In; within; into; on; among; — sometimes used with simple intensive force. In words of Latin origin it regularly becomes il- before l, ir- before r, and im- before a labial, as b, m, p; as, *in*bred, *in*trude, *il*lude, *ir*ruption, *im*bue, *im*migrate, *im*part, *in*criminate. 2. [L. in-; akin to E. un-.] Not; contrary to; without; non-; un-; as, *in*adequate, *il*logical, *ir*responsible, *im*measurable, *im*provident; — this suffix changing like the preceding.

Indo-. Pertaining to East India; Indian; as, Indo-European.

Infra-. [L.; akin to E. under.] Below; beneath; under; after; as, *infra*maxillary, under the lower jaw, also of or pertaining to the lower jaw.

Inter-. [L. inter; compar. of in in.] Among; between; amid; as, *inter*fere, *inter*polate.

Intra-. [L. intra; akin to inter.] Within; on the inside of; interior; as, *intra*marginal, within the margin.

Intro-. [L. intro; akin to inter.] Within; into; in; inward; as, *intro*duce, *intro*spection.

Iodo-, Iod-. Having iodine as an ingredient; — a chemical combining form; as, *iod*ide.

Ir-. A form of In-.

Iso-, Is-. [Gr. ἴσος equal.] Identical; equal; of the same numerical value; as, *iso*metric.

Juxta-. [L.] Near; nigh; close; as, *juxta*position.

Lævo-. Same as Levo-.

Leuco-, Leuc-. [Gr. λευκός white.] White; colorless; as, *leuco*phyllous (white-leaved).

chemistry, referring to the plane of polarized light; as, *levo*rotary (turning this plane to the left).

Litho-. [Gr. λίθος stone.] Pertaining to stone; made of, or on, stone; stony; as, *litho*graph, *litho*logy.

Luteo-. [L. luteus.] Orange yellow; brownish yellow; buff; — a chemical combining form.

Macro-, Macr-. [Gr. μακρός.] Long; large; great; as, *macro*cosm.

Magneto-. Pertaining to, produced by, or connected with, magnetism; as, magneto-electricity.

Mal-, Male-. [F. mal, or L. male, adv., fr. malus ill, bad.] Ill; evil; bad; badly; as, *mal*diction, *mal*content, *mal*administration.

Mega-, Megalo-, Meg-. [Gr. μέγας, gen. μεγάλου, great.] 1. Great; extended; powerful; as *mega*therium. 2. A million times; a million of; — combining forms in the Metric System, electric science, mechanics, etc.; as, *mega*volt (a million volts).

Meso-, Mes-. [Gr. μέσος in the middle.] In the middle; intermediate; as, *meso*carp, *mes*entery.

Meta-, Met-. [Gr. μετά between, with, after.] 1. Between; with; after; behind; over; about; reversely; as, *meta*meric, *meta*thesis, *met*empsychosis. 2. Other; duplicate; corresponding to; resembling; hence, metameric; — chemical prefix; as, *met*aldehyde (substance metameric with aldehyde).

Micro-, Micr-. [Gr. μικρός small.] 1. Small; little; trivial; slight; as, *micro*scope. 2. A millionth part of; — combining forms in the Metric System, electric science, mechanics, etc.; as, *micro*farad (one millionth of a farad).

Milli-. [F.; fr. L. mille a thousand.] A thousandth part of; — combining form in the Metric System, etc.; as, *milli*meter.

Mis-. [AS. mis-; akin to G. miss-, and fr. same root as G. meiden to shun. Also OF. mes-, fr. L. minus less. The prefix from the French has been supplanted by the AS. form, which is now the one in use.] Amiss; wrong; ill; unsuitable; unlike; as, *mis*take, *mis*lead, *mis*chief, *mis*creant.

Mono-, Mon-. [Gr. μόνος.] One; single; alone; sole; only; as, *mono*tony, *mono*xide.

Multi-, Mult-. [L. multus much.] Much; many; several; more than one; as, *multi*form, *mult*angular.

Myo-. [Gr. μῦς, μυός, a muscle.] Relating to muscles; — an anatomical combining form; as, *myo*graphy.

Myria-. [Gr. μυριάς myriad.] Ten thousand; ten thousand times; as, *myria*pod.

Naso-. [L. nasus nose.] Pertaining to, or connected with, the nose; — anatomical combining form; as, *naso*lachrymal.

Neo-. [Gr. νέος youthful; akin to E. new.] New; recent; late; as, *neo*phyte.

Neuro-, Neur-. [Gr. νεῦρον nerve.] Pertaining to a nerve or to the nervous system; as, *neuro*ptera.

Nitro-. Containing niter or compounds of nitrogen; as, *nitro*benzene.

Non-. [L., fr. OL. neoenum not one.] Not; un-; in-; as, *non*essential, *non*conformity.

Noto-. Of, or pertaining to, the back; — a combining form in anatomy, zoölogy, botany, etc.; as, *noto*chord.

Ob-. [L. ob.] To; toward; before; against; reversely; — also used intensively. Ob- is commonly assimilated before c, f, g, and p to oc-, of-, og-, and op- respectively; as, *ob*trude, *oc*cur, *of*fer, *op*pose, *ob*verse, *ob*secrate.

Oc-. A form of Ob-.

Octo-, Octa-. [L. octo eight, or the kindred Gr. ὀκτώ, with combining form ὀκτα-; akin to E. eight.] Eight; eighth; as, *octo*pod, *octa*gon.

Odonto-, Odont-. [Gr. ὀδούς, ὀδόντος, a tooth.] Pertaining to a tooth or teeth; as, *odonto*logy, *odont*algia.

Of-, Og-. Forms of Ob-.

Oligo-, Olig-. [Gr. ὀλίγος.] Few; little; as, *oligo*spermous (few-seeded), *olig*archy.

Omni-. [L. omnis.] All; every; everywhere; as, *omni*present, *omni*potent.

Op-. A form of Ob-.

Organo-. [Gr. ὄργανον organ.] Relating to, or connected with, an organ or organs; as, *organo*graphy.

Ornitho-. [Gr. ὄρνις, ὄρνιθος, a bird.] Of, or pertaining to, birds; as, *ornitho*logy.

Ortho-. [Gr. ὀρθός straight.] 1. Straight; right; upright; correct; regular; as, *ortho*graphy. 2. (Chem.) A combining form, also used adjectively, designating (a) (Inorganic Chem.) The one of several acids of the same element which actually occurs with the greatest number of hydroxyl groups. (b) (Organic Chem.) A connection with, or affinity to, isomerism, such as that characteristic of the benzene compounds.

Osteo-. [Gr. ὀστέον a bone.] Pertaining to, or connected with, bones; as, *osteo*logy.

Oto-, Ot-. [Gr. οὖς, ὠτός, the ear.] Pertaining to the ear; in or near the ear; as, *oto*algia.

Out-. [E. out, adv.; fr. AS. ūt.] From; beyond; more; not within; as, *out*do, *out*side.

Over-. [E. over, adv.; fr. AS. ofer; akin to L. super, Gr. ὑπέρ.] Above; beyond; in excess; too great; undue; needless; superfluous; as, *over*due, *over*lap.

Oxy-. Containing oxygen; hydroxy-; — a chemical combining form; as, *oxy*hydrogen (having or using oxygen and hydrogen).

Pachy-. [Gr. παχύς thick.] Thick; as, *pachy*dermata.

Pan-, Panta-, Panto-. [Gr. πᾶς, m., πᾶν, neut., gen. παντός, all.] All; every; as, *pan*theism, *panta*graph, *panto*mime.

Par-. [F.; fr. L. per.] By; with; through; as, *par*don, *par*terre, *para*mount.

Para-. [Gr. παρά beside.] Alongside of; beside; beyond; against; amiss; as, *para*dox, *para*site.

Pari-. [L. par, paris, equal.] Equal; even; as, *pari*pinnate.

Parieto-. Connected with, or related to, the parietal bones or parietal segment of the skull; — an anatomical combining form; as, parieto-mastoid.

Pedi-, Pedo-. [L. pes, pedis, foot; akin to E. foot.] Pertaining to the foot; pedal; as, *pedi*ment, *pedo*meter.

Penta-, Pent-. [Gr. πεντα-, combining form of πέντε five; akin to E. five.] Five; fivefold; as, *penta*gon.

Per-. [L. per, prep.; sometimes through F. par-.] 1. Through; throughout; by; for; often used also intensively; as, *per*forate, *per*haps, *per*force, *per*spicuous, *per*form. 2. In chemistry, formerly, having the highest valence; now, having a higher valence than in some other compound; as, *per*oxide (an oxide in which oxygen has a valence higher than in some other).

Peri-. [Gr. περί.] Around; by; near; over; beyond; — also used intensively; as, *peri*meter, *peri*spherical (quite spherical).

Petro-, Petr-. [Gr. πέτρα a rock, πέτρος stone.] Pertaining to rocks, stone, etc.; as, *petro*leum.

Philo-, Phil-. [Gr. φίλος loving.] Fond of; attached to; as, *philo*logy, *phil*anthropy.

Phono-. [Gr. φωνή sound, tone.] Relating to sounds and speech; as, *phono*graphy.

Physico-. [Gr. φυσικός natural, fr. φύσις nature.] Relating to, or depending upon, natural causes or the science of physics; as, physico-theology. [*phyto*logy.]

Phyto-. [Gr. φυτόν a plant.] Relating to plants; as,

Plani-, Plano-. [L. planus level.] Flat; level; plane; as, *plani*meter, plano-concave.

Platy-. [Gr. πλατύς broad.] Broad; wide; flat; as, *platy*cephalous (wide-headed).

Pleuro-. [Gr. πλευρά a rib, the side.] Relating to a side; connected with the pleura; as, *pleuro*pneumonia.

Pluri-. [L. plus, pluris, more.] More; many.

Pneumato-. [Gr. πνεῦμα, πνεύματος, air, breath.] Pertaining to the properties of air and other elastic fluids, or to breath or respiration; as, *pneumato*logy.

Pneumo-. [Gr. πνεύμων, πνεύμονος, a lung.] Relating to the lungs; as, *pneumo*gastric (relating to the lungs and stomach).

Podo-. [Gr. πούς, ποδός, a foot; akin to E. foot.] Relating to a foot, or the feet; as, *podo*phyllous (having leaflike organs of locomotion).

Poly-. [Gr. πολύς much; akin to E. full.] Many; repeated; as, *poly*gon. [*post*fix, *post*obit.]

Post-. [L. post after.] Behind; back; after; later; as,

Postero-. [L. posterus coming after; fr. post after.] Posterior; back; later; hinder; as, postero-inferior.

Præ-, Præter-. Forms of Pre-, Preter-.

Pre-. [L. prae before; akin to L. pro and E. for, prep.] Before; forward; forth; prior in time, place, or rank; used also intensively; as, *pre*fix, *pre*cede, *pre*eminent.

Preter-. [L. praeter past, beyond, a compar. of prae before.] Past; by; beyond; more than; as, *preter*natural.

Pro-. [L. pro, or the kindred Gr. πρό; akin to E. for, prep.] Before; in front; forth; in behalf of; in place of; according to; as, *pro*ject, *pro*logue, *pro*vide, *pro*noun.

Pros-. [Gr. πρός.] Towards; at; by; beside; forth; as, *pros*ody.

Proto-, Prot-. [Gr. πρῶτος first, superl. of πρό before.] 1. First; primary; primordial; as, *proto*plasm. 2. As a chemical combining form: (a) First or lowest in a series; having the smallest amount of the element named; as, *proto*silicate (silicate with least silicic acid). (b) Sometimes equivalent to Mono-.

Pseudo-, Pseud-. [Gr. ψευδής lying, false.] False; counterfeit; pretended; spurious; as, *pseudo*nym; — also used adjectively; as, pseudo religion.

Psycho-. [Gr. ψυχή the soul.] Relating to the soul, mind, or understanding; as, *psycho*logy.

Pur-. [OF. por, pur, pour; fr. L. pro.] Forward; before; as, *pur*chase. See Pro-.

Pyro-, Pyr-. [Gr. πῦρ, πυρός, fire.] Causing, or caused by, fire or heat; as, *pyro*logy.

Quadri-. [L., fr. quattuor four.] Four; four times; fourfold; as, *quadri*lateral.

Quinque-. [L. quinque five.] Five; five times; fivefold; as, *quinque*foliate.

Re-, Red-. [L.; sometimes through F.] Back; against; again; anew; as, *re*cline, *re*call, *re*join, *re*iterate, *re*assure. [lineal.]

Recti-. [L. rectus straight.] Straight; right; as, recti-

Retro-. [L. retro backward.] Back; backward; as, *retro*act.

Rhino-. [Gr. ῥίς, ῥινός, the nose.] Relating to the nose; nasal; as, *rhino*plasty.

Schizo-. [Gr. σχίζειν to split, cleave.] Dividing; cleaving; as, *schizo*carp (a dry fruit that splits at maturity).

Semi-. [L.; akin to Gr. ἡμι- half.] Half; hemi-; partly; imperfectly; as, *semi*circle, *semi*fluid.

Septi-, Sept-. [L. septem seven; akin to E. seven.] Seven; seven times; sevenfold; as, *sept*angle, *septi*folious (seven-leaved).

Sesqui-. [L., one half more, one and a half.] 1. One and a half; as, *sesqui*pedal. 2. Containing three atoms (of the substance named) combined with two atoms (of another element); — chemical combining form; as, *sesqui*oxide. [nial.]

Sex-. [L. sex six.] Six; six times; sixfold; as, sexen-

Stanno-. [L. stannum tin.] Pertaining to, or containing, tin; as, stanno fluoride; — also used adjectively; as, stanno compounds.

Step-. [AS. steóp-; akin to G. stief-, and to AS. āsteópan to deprive, bereave (children of parents).] Having (a specified relationship) through a parent's marriage; as, *step*son, *step*father. [*stereo*graphy.]

Stereo-. [Gr. στερεός solid.] Solid; hard; firm; as,

Sub-. [L. sub under; akin to Gr. ὑπό.] 1. Under; beneath; below; in an inferior position or degree; in an imperfect or partial state; as, *sub*scribe, *sub*serve, *sub*orn, *sub*acid. In words from Latin it is regularly suc- before c, suf- before f, sug- before g, and sup- before p; sum- before m, and sur- before r occur in a few instances; as, success, suffer, suggest, summon, surrender. See also Sus-. 2. Containing a small proportion or less than the normal amount of (the substance to the name of which it is prefixed); — an obsolescent chemical use; as, *sub*oxide (an oxide with less than the normal amount of oxygen).

Subter-. [L. subter, a comparative form of sub under.] Under; beneath; as, *subter*fuge.

Suc-, Suf-, Sug-, Sum-, Sup-. Forms of Sub-.

Super-. [L. super over, above; akin to Gr. ὑπέρ, E. over.] Above; over; more than; in a superior position; in addition; in excess; exceedingly; as, *super*impose, *super*cede, *super*natural, *super*abundant.

Supra-. [L. supra; akin to super over.] Over; above; before; beyond; besides; as, *supra*mundane.

Sur-. 1. [F., over, above; fr. L. super, supra.] Over; above; beyond; upon; as, *sur*base, *sur*charge. 2. A form of Sub-.

Sus-. [L., for subs, fr. sub under; sometimes through OF. fr. L. subtus below, fr. sub.] Equivalent to Sub-.

Syl-, Sym-. Forms of Syn-.

Syn-. [Gr. σύν with.] With; along with; together; at the same time; as, *syn*onym. Syn- becomes syl- before l, and sym- before p, b, and m; as, *syl*lable, *sym*bol.

Temporo-. Connected with the temple or temporal bone; — an anatomical term; as, temporo-auricular (pertaining to the temple and the ear).

Ter-. [L. ter thrice.] Three; thrice; tri-; as, *ter*centenary (relating to an interval of 300 years).

Tetra-, Tetr-. [Gr. τέτρα-, fr. τέσσαρες, τέτταρες, four.] Four; fourfold; as, *tetra*hedron.

Thermo-. [Gr. θέρμη heat, θερμός hot, warm.] Relating to, causing, or caused by, heat; as, *thermo*meter.

Trans-. [L. trans across.] Over; beyond; through; through and through; on the other side; as, *trans*alpine, *trans*form, *trans*migrate.

Tri-. [Gr. τρι-, or L. tri-; akin to L. tres, E. three.] 1. Three; thrice; threefold; as, *tri*angle, *tri*colored. 2. Containing three proportional or combining parts of the substance named, or being of its third degree; — a chemical combining form; as, *tri*sulphide (a sulphide containing three atoms of sulphur).

Ultra-. [L. ultra beyond.] Beyond; on the other side; excessively; inordinately; as, *ultra*marine, *ultra*montane, *ultra*mundane.

Un-. [AS. un-, on-; akin to G. ent-, Goth. and-, L. ante before, Gr. ἀντί against.] Undoing; reversing; — prefixed: (a) to verbs to express the contrary, not the simple negative, of the action of the verb modified; as, *un*bend, undo, *un*fold; (b) to nouns, forming verbs expressing privation of the quality expressed by the noun, or separation from it; as, *un*church, *un*sex. It is sometimes used merely as an intensive; as, *un*loose.

Un-. [AS. un-; akin to L. in-, Gr. ἀν-, ἀ-, not, without.] Not; in-; non-; — prefixed to adjectives, participles, and adverbs, sometimes to nouns, forming words expressing the negative of the meaning of the original word; as, *un*able.

Under-. [E. under, prep. and adv.; fr. AS. under; akin to G. unter, L. infra below, inferior lower.] Below; beneath; inferior; as, *under*mine.

Uni-. [L. unus one.] One; single; once.

Up-. [E. up, prep. and adv.; fr. AS. up, upp, ūp; akin to G. auf, and to E. over.] Upwards; over; above; as, *up*hold. [ing form.]

Uranoso-. Containing uranium; — a chemical combin-

Vice-. [L. vice, abl. of vicis change, turn.] In the place of; instead of; representing; next in rank to, and (on occasion) assuming the duties of, a superior in office; as, *vice*gerent, *vice*roy; — also used adjectively; as, vice admiral.

With-. [E. with, in its old sense of against; fr. AS. wið; akin to G. wider.] Against; back; in opposition; from; away; by; as, *with*stand, *with*draw.

Xylo-, Xyl-. [Gr. ξύλον wood.] Derived from wood; as, *xylo*phone, *xylo*gen.

Y-, or I-. [OE. y-, i-, AS. ge-; akin to G. ge-.] A prefix, of obscure meaning, originally used with verbs, adverbs, adjectives, nouns, and pronouns. In the Middle English period it was little used except with past participles of verbs. Ycleped, or yclept (called), is perhaps the only word not entirely obsolete which shows this use.

Zoö-. [Gr. ζῷον an animal.] Relating to animals; as, *zoö*logy, *zoö*tomy.

SUFFIXES.

Note. — In the following list of suffixes there are included many which are now used and considered as such in English, but which historically are the result of older endings not always strictly suffixes, but often containing a part of the stem of a primitive word, and also, sometimes, more than one original suffix.

Some very rare or much altered suffixes and a number of compound suffixes, the meanings of which are readily gathered from the elements of which they are made up, are omitted.

-able, -ible. [F. -able, or L. -abilis; F. -ible, or L. -ibilis.] Capable of being or doing; fit to be; causing; — usually in a passive sense; as, cap*able*, pass*able*, amen*able*, suit*able*.

☞ Generally the form -able is affixed to uncorrupted infinitival stems of Latin verbs of the first conjugation (verbs ending in -are), to verbs from the Anglo-Saxon, and to all nouns whatsoever their source; in other cases -ible is used.

-ably, -ibly. Adverbial forms corresponding to -able, -ible.

-ac. [Gr. -ακός; often through F. -aque, or L. -acus.] Of or pertaining to; partaking of; one who; as, cardi*ac*, demoni*ac*, elegi*ac*, zodi*ac*.

-aceous. [L. -aceus.] Having; pertaining to; resembling; full of; as, cetaceous, herb*aceous*, sapon*aceous*, ros*aceous*.

-acious. [L. -ax, gen. -acis.] Characterized by; showing; indicating; as, mend*acious*, aud*acious*, cap*acious*.

-acity. [L. -acitas; sometimes through F. -acité.] A suffix corresponding to -ACIOUS, and forming abstract nouns; as, aud*acity*.

-acy. [OF. -acie, or LL. -atia.] State or quality of being; office of; -cy; as, abb*acy*, prim*acy*, diplom*acy*, advoc*acy*.

-ad. [Gr. -ἀδ- (nom. -ἀς).] 1. Thing that is (single, double, etc.); mon*ad*, dy*ad*. 2. Patronymic form equivalent to -ID; as, dry*ad*, Ili*ad*, dunci*ad*.

-age. [F.; fr. L. -aticum.] Collection of; state of being; act of; allowance for; as, sav*age*, umbr*age*, foli*age*, hom*age*, dam*age*, break*age*.

-al. [F. -al, -el, or L. -alis; sometimes (forming nouns) fr. F. -aille, fr. L. neut. pl. -alia.] Of; pertaining to; befitting; becoming; act of; as, mort*al*, basa*l*, cordi*al*, annu*al*, eternal, riv*al*, anim*al*, ann*al*.

-an, -ian. [F. -an, -ain, -ien, or L. -anus, -ianus.] Pertaining to (office, profession, character, etc.); one who; as, urb*an*, Luther*an*, mammal*ian*, Christ*ian*.

-ana. [Neuter pl. ending of L. adjectives in -anus.] Things pertaining to (persons or places named); — used of collections of anecdotes, sayings, etc.; as, Virgili*ana*, Shakespeare*ana*.

-ance, -ancy. [F. -ance, or L. -antia, -entia.] Condition; quality; state; act of; as, assist*ance*, complais*ance*, complais*ancy*, relev*ancy*, eleg*ance*.

-androus. [Gr. ἀνήρ, ἀνδρός, a man.] Having stamens; staminate; as, an*androus*, poly*androus* (with many stamens), gyn*androus* (with stamens inserted on the pistil).

-aneous. [L. -aneus.] Being; existing; as, contempor*aneous*, simult*aneous*.

-ant. [F. -ant, or L. -ans, -antis, -ens, -entis.] One who; that which; doing; -ent; as, ascend*ant*, depend*ant*, pli*ant*, serv*ant*.

-ar. 1. [L. -aris.] Of; pertaining to; -al; as, lun*ar*, stell*ar*, regul*ar*. 2. [L. -arius; sometimes through French.] One who; that which; -er; as, vic*ar*, pill*ar*.

-arch. [Gr. ἀρχός chief, commander.] Ruler; leader; as, mon*arch*, symposi*arch*.

-archy. [Gr. -αρχία, fr. ἀρχός chief.] A rule; ruling; authority; as, mon*archy*, olig*archy*.

-ard, -art. [F.; of G. origin.] Of (such a) disposition or character; one who; liable or addicted to; — an intensive form; as, bas*tard*, wiz*ard*, drunk*ard*, brag*gart*.

-ary. [L. -arius.] Of or pertaining to; doer of (something specified); place where; as, arbitr*ary*, volunt*ary*, adversa*ry*, granar*y*, diar*y*.

-ate. [L. -atus, termin. of past participles.] 1. -ed; — participial and adj. suffix; as, situ*ate*, desol*ate*, caud*ate*, obl*ate*. 2. To make, cause, or act; — verbal suffix; as, separ*ate*, aggrav*ate*, fascin*ate*. 3. Denoting salts formed from acids whose names end in -IC; — chemical suffix; as, chlor*ate*, nitr*ate*, sulph*ate*. 4. [L. -atus.] Agent; office; — a noun suffix; as, cur*ate*, sen*ate*, mand*ate*.

-blast. [Gr. βλαστός sprout, shoot.] Growth; formation; — suffix used chiefly in biological terms; as, mero*blast*, holo*blast*.

-ble. [L. -bilis.] See -ABLE, -IBLE.

-cal. [L. -calis.] See -ICAL, -IC.

-carpous. [Gr. καρπός fruit.] Bearing fruit (of a kind, or in a manner, indicated); as, mono*carpous* (bearing fruit but once); anthro*carpous* (having some part of the floral envelope developed into fruit).

-cephalous. [Gr. κεφαλή head.] Having a head or heads; as, hydro*cephalous*, brachy*cephalous* (having a short head).

-cle, -cule, -culus, -culum. [L. -culus, -cula, -culum.] A small, diminutive, or little thing (of a kind indicated); as, follic*le*, auric*le*, corpus*cle*, animal*cule*, calc*ulus*, curric*ulum*.

-cracy. [Gr. -κρατία, fr. κρατεῖν to be strong, to rule, κράτος strength.] Government; rule; ruling or governing power or authority; as, demo*cracy*, bureau*cracy*, mono*cracy*.

NOTE. — A study of the foregoing list of Prefixes and Suffixes in connection with the etymologies in the body of the work will contribute to an understanding of the proper mode of forming words, and of the signification of their constituent parts.

RELATIONS OF ENGLISH TO OTHER LANGUAGES.

§ 1. Native and Foreign Elements. English, as now spoken and written, is, as regards its vocabulary, a composite language. Words have been adopted from a large number of languages spoken in various parts of the world, and in such numbers that of our whole stock of words, as found in the largest and most complete dictionaries, much more than half are of foreign origin. These borrowed words have come in the greatest numbers from French, Latin, and Greek, which are languages kindred to English. But a very large proportion of these words is of comparatively infrequent or of technical use, and, if we omit such words from consideration, we find that there is only one group of originally foreign or non-Teutonic words which has contributed in a very marked degree to the familiar vocabulary of daily life; namely, the French words, — for the most part, of Latin descent, — which were adopted after the Norman Conquest, during the period when French was much spoken in England. As the vernacular of the ruling classes, French even seemed for a time to threaten to supplant the native English and become in its stead the national language of England, just as the vulgar, or common, Latin from which it descended had established itself in what is now France, displacing the earlier Celtic speech of that country, or as the native English (or Anglo-Saxon) had itself displaced, to a great extent, the Celtic formerly spoken in Britain. Such familiar words as uncle, aunt, cousin, second, quart, quarter, very (adj. and adv.), catch, etc., and a few suffixes are from French.

§ 2. Anglo-Saxon, Teutonic, Indo-European. The native English is the descendant and representative of the Anglo-Saxon, the speech of Teutonic tribes which came into England in the fifth century as conquerors, and subdued the Celtic inhabitants. The language of the latter still survives in Wales as Welsh, a tongue allied to the now extinct Cornish, and to Irish and Gaelic. English has lost most of the inflection, and many of the words, which belonged to the parent language; and, as has been said above, it has borrowed words very largely from other languages. Yet the inflections it still possesses, most of its formative endings, its pronouns, and most of its particles, as conjunctions and prepositions, and more than half of the words which are in most frequent and familiar use are from the Anglo-Saxon. With all its mixture of foreign elements it is still essentially a Teutonic language, like Dutch, German, Danish, Swedish, and some others. These again make one branch, the Teutonic or Germanic, of that great family of languages, which, as it extends from India westward, and covers nearly the entire area of Europe, is called Indo-European (or sometimes Indo-Germanic). Among all families of languages, the Indo-European (sometimes also called Aryan or Japhetic) is remarkable for its highly developed organic structure, and is preëminent for the value of its literary monuments. The parent of the whole family, the primitive Indo-European language, has, indeed, left no monument of itself, but its forms and roots may be made out, to a great extent, by the scientific comparison of the languages which are descended from it. All these, it is true, have suffered various and sometimes far-reaching modifications and alterations of the original structure, and this is true in a high degree of the Teutonic languages, even in the earliest forms in which we know them. The main branches of the Indo-European family are the following: —

§ 3. I. The Indian. The Sanskrit of the four Vedas, the sacred books of the Brahman religion, is more ancient than the common or classical Sanskrit. Even the latter had ceased to be the language of common life as early as the third century before Christ. It was succeeded by the Prakrit dialects, one of which, the Pali, is the sacred language of the Buddhists in Ceylon and Farther India. These, in their turn, were succeeded by the modern idioms of Northern Hindustan, the Bengali, Marathi, Guzerathi, and others. The Hindustani (or Urdu), formed in the camps and courts of the Mohammedan conquerors of India, is largely intermixed with Persian and Arabic. The widely-scattered Gypsies speak, with great diversity of dialect, a language which is clearly of Indian stock.

§ 4. II. The Iranian. To this branch belong, 1. The Zend (better called Avestan), preserved in the Avesta, or sacred writings of the Parsis. 2. The Old Persian, which is seen in the cuneiform (or arrow-headed) inscriptions of Darius and Xerxes. The modern Persian has lost nearly all the ancient inflection, and with the Mohammedan religion has adopted a multitude of words from the Arabic. Other languages belonging to this branch are those of the Kurds, the Afghans, the Ossetes (in the Caucasus), and the Baluchi, spoken in Baluchistan. The Indian and Iranian are often classed together as forming the Indo-Persian or Aryan branch of our family.

§ 5. III. The Armenian. This language forms a sort of connecting link between the preceding branches and the European branches of the family.

§ 6. IV. The Greek. Of its numerous dialects, the first to receive literary culture was the Old Ionic or Epic, followed by the Æolic, the Doric, the New Ionic, and finally the Attic, which became at length, though with some change of form, the common language of literature and society. It is represented now by the Romaic or Modern Greek.

§ 7. V. The Italic. This is sometimes joined with the preceding, as the Græco-Latin, or Classical branch. Closely allied to Latin, the most important and the best known language of this branch, were the Oscan and the Umbrian, in central Italy, and some other dialects. The modern descendants of the Latin are called the Romance or Romanic languages. They are the Italian, the Spanish, the Portuguese, the Provençal (of southern France, important as a literary language in the Middle Ages), the Catalan (in Catalonia and Valencia in Spain, hardly more than a dialect of Provençal), the French, the Rhæto-Romance dialects (in parts of Switzerland, Tyrol, and Italy), and the Roumanian. All of these, except the Roumanian, contain a certain proportion of Teutonic words, brought in by the Teutonic tribes which established themselves in the territory of the Western Roman Empire. The Roumanian contains many foreign words, especially from the Slavonic.

§ 8. VI. The Celtic. The living languages of this branch are divided by strongly marked differences into two sections: the one comprising the Irish, the Gaelic (or Erse or Highland Scotch), and the Manx spoken on the Isle of Man (the last two are little more than dialects of Irish); the other, the Welsh and the Breton or Armorican (spoken in the French province of Brittany, where it was brought by immigrants from England in the fifth and sixth centuries of our era). The Cornish, formerly spoken in Cornwall, died out in the last century; it was closely allied to Breton and Welsh. Not much is known of the Celtic dialects formerly spoken on the continent of Europe, notably in Gaul. The oldest Irish manuscripts date from the eighth century; the oldest Welsh ones of any considerable extent belong to the twelfth.

§ 9. VII. The ALBANIAN. This language, spoken in Albania in the southwestern part of European Turkey and a part of Greece, has now been recognized as a separate branch of the family. It is probably the descendant of the ancient Illyrian, but has become much altered, and has suffered from the influences of other languages, especially Latin.

§ 10. VIII. The SLAVONIC or SLAVIC. The oldest monument is the version of the Bible made in the ninth century by the Greek missionaries Cyril and Methodius into the Old Slavonic or Church Slavonic, an idiom closely related to the Bulgarian. The most important of the other Slavonic languages are, in the east and south, the Russian (including the Little Russian or Ruthenian, and other dialects), the Bulgarian, the Servo-Croatian, the Slovenic, and, in the west, the Polish, the Bohemian (with the Moravian and Slovack dialects), the Lusatian or Wendish, the Casubian, and the extinct Polabian.

§ 11. IX. The BALTIC or LETTISH. The language of Lithuania, the Lithuanian, has no monuments older than the middle of the sixteenth century; but it has preserved in a surprising degree the ancient inflection and structure. To the same stock belong the Lettish of Courland and Livonia, which is much less ancient in its form, and the Old Prussian, which was once spoken on the coast of the Baltic east of the Vistula, but became extinct in the seventeenth century. The connection between this and the preceding branch is such that they are often classed together as the Letto-Slavic or Balto-Slavic languages.

§ 12. The TEUTONIC or GERMANIC. Here again the earliest monument is a version of the Bible, made by Ulfilas, an Arian bishop of the fourth century, into his native Gothic (or Mæso-Gothic), the language spoken at that time by the Goths on the Lower Danube. This work is preserved only in fragments, but these are of considerable extent, and are of inestimable value to the philologist. Among the Teutonic languages we distinguish, besides the Gothic, already mentioned: —

§ 13. 1. The Norse, or Scandinavian. The Old Norse is also called Old Icelandic, as most of its abundant literature (Eddas, Sagas, etc.) was composed in Iceland. The oldest manuscripts in which it is preserved are of the end of the twelfth century; but many of its productions are of earlier origin, going back even to the heathen times of Scandinavia. The modern Icelandic has adhered with considerable fidelity to the forms of the ancient language. But the modern idioms of the Scandinavian mainland, the Swedish, and, still more, the Danish (including the Dano-Norwegian, or literary language of Norway), and the Norwegian dialects, have undergone extensive changes.

§ 14. 2. The West-Teutonic or West-Germanic group. It includes the following languages: (a) High German, in upper or southern Germany. The Old High German is seen in Otfrid's Krist, Notker's Translation of the Psalms, and other monuments, most of them in verse, from the eighth century to the end of the eleventh. The Middle High German, from the twelfth to the fifteenth century, has a rich poetical literature, including national poetry like the Nibelungenlied, courtly epics, and the lyric poetry of the Minnesinger. Modern German, sometimes called New High German, is the language of Luther's version of the Bible and of German literature since the Reformation. (b) Low German, in northern Germany and the Netherlands, which properly includes not only the so-called Plattdeutsch, but also the parent of these dialects, the Old Sazon, seen in the Heliand (i. e., Saviour), a metrical narration of the gospel history, preserved in manuscripts, one of which is of the ninth century, likewise the Dutch and the Flemish (almost identical with Dutch). Under Low German is also included the Friesic or Frisian, once spoken along almost all the northern coast of Germany and the Netherlands, west of the Elbe. Its early monuments consist almost wholly of laws, beginning as early as the thirteenth century. For a long time it has existed only as a popular idiom, and is now confined to a few small and scattered localities. And, lastly, from a region not far from the mouth of the Eider or the Elbe, in Schleswig, seems to have come at least one of the Teutonic tribes (the Angles), who brought their language into Britain. From the language of these invading West Teutonic tribes comes the language which after their establishment in England was called English (englisc), and which is now called Anglo-Saxon, or, by many scholars, Old English. English is therefore most closely related to Frisian and the other Low German tongues spoken on the continent of Europe.

§ 15. Languages not kindred to the English. The Indo-European family has no isolated domain, but comes in contact with various other families of languages. It is bounded along much of its northern frontier by the Tartaric (or Tataric) family (called also the Turanian, or the Altaic, or Ural-Altaic), which includes the numerous and widely-different languages of the Manchus, the Mongols, the Turks (in Asia and Europe), the Magyars (in Hungary), the Finns, and a multitude of other tribes. To the southeast it touches on the so-called Dravidian family, the Tamil and its sister idioms in Ceylon and Southern India. In Southwestern Asia it is in contact with a more remarkable family, — the Semitic, — including the Hebrew, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic, with their ancient and important literatures. Even in Southwestern Europe, it is doubtful whether the ancient Etruscan belonged to our family. It is perfectly clear that the ancient Iberian did not belong to it, which was once the prevailing language of the Spanish peninsula, and which still lives, on the two sides of the Pyrenees, in the strange language called Basque (Biscayan, or Euscarra). Whether the Indo-European has a primitive connection with any of the adjacent families, is a question which has not been, and perhaps never will be, decided by philological evidence. At all events, it is certain that between Welsh and Sanskrit, distant as they are in space and time, there is a much closer connection than between the neighboring pairs of Russian and Finnish, German and Hungarian, or Greek and Hebrew. It is true that some languages of our family have borrowed particular words from languages of other families. The English, for example, has taken from the Hebrew such words as shekel, cherub, seraph, jubilee, pharisee, cabala, etc.; and from some of them has formed derivatives, such as seraphic, jubilant, pharisaical, pharisaism, cabalist, cabalistical, etc. But this borrowing can only occur where there are historical conditions that favor it: even then it has its limits and its distinctive mark, and must not be confounded with a radical affinity between two languages. All etymologizing which assumes or implies a radical, or root, affinity between English and Hebrew, English and Finnish, or the like, is, in the present state of philology, unscientific and illusory.

§ 16. The relations of the various languages considered above are exhibited approximately in the following classification.

Classification of Languages.

INDO-EUROPEAN[1] LANGUAGES.	SUB-BRANCHES.	BRANCHES.
Sanskrit (divided into Vedic Sanskrit and the Classical, or more modern, Sanskrit), Prakrit, Pali; Bengali, Marathi, Guzerathi, etc.; Hindi, Hindustani (or Urdu); Gypsy		Indian, or Indic[2]
Zend (or Avestan, or Old Bactrian), Old Persian, Pehlevi (including Huzvaresh and Parsi or Pazend), Modern Persian, Kurdish, Afghan (or Pushto), Baluchi, Ossetic, etc.		Iranian,[2] or Iranic, or Persian
Armenian		Armenian
Old Ionic (or Epic), New Ionic, Attic, Æolic, Doric; Romaic (or Modern Greek)		Greek, or Hellenic[3]
Oscan (or Opican), Umbrian, Latin; the Romance (or Romanic) languages (descendants of the Latin), viz., Italian, Portuguese, Spanish, Provençal, Catalan, French, Rhæto-Romanic, Roumanian		Latin,[3] or Italic
Irish, Erse (or Gaelic of the Scottish Highlands, called also Highland Scotch), Manx	Gadhelic	Celtic
Cornish, Welsh, Armorican (or Breton)	Cymric
Albanian		Albanian
Old Bulgarian (or Old Slavonic, or Church Slavic), Bulgarian, Russian (or Russ; — including the Russian proper, and the Little-Russian, or Ruthenian), Servo-Croatian, and Slovenic	Eastern and Southern	Slavonic,[4] or Slavic

SEMITIC LANGUAGES.	BRANCHES.
Himyaritic, Ethiopic (or Geëz); Arabic; Maltese; Amharic, and other Abyssinian dialects	Arabic, or Southern	Semitic Family[6]
Hebrew, Samaritan, Phenician, Punic	Hebraic, or Middle[7]
Aramaic (or Aramæan, or Chaldaic, or Chaldee), Assyrian (or Babylonian), Syriac, Neo-Syriac	Aramaic, or Northern

Indo-European or Aryan Family[1]

Note. — The names of dead languages are printed in Italic.

1 Sometimes called Indo-Germanic or Japhetic. 2 The Indian and Iranian branches are often classed together as forming the Indo-Persian or Aryan branch of the family. 3 The Greek and Latin are often joined together as the Græco-Latin, or classical branch. 4 The Slavonic and Lettish (or Baltic) branches are often classed together as the Letto-Slavic or Balto-Slavic languages. 5 Variously divided into periods, — frequently four, viz., Semi-Saxon (A. D. 1150–1250), Old English (A. D. 1250–1350), Middle English (A. D. 1350–1550), Modern English (A. D. 1550 to the present day). 6 Called also Shemitic and Syro-Arabian. 7 Called also Canaanitic.

Besides the Indo-European and Semitic families, philologists distinguish others, which may be classed as follows: —

Tartaric (or Tataric) Family (called also Turanian, Scythian, Altaic, Ural-Altaic, and Mongolian), including the numerous and widely different languages of the Manchus, the Mongols, the Turks (in Asia and Europe), the Magyars (in Hungary), the Finns, the Laplanders, the Samoyeds, and a multitude of other tribes. Whether the Tamil and its sister idioms in Ceylon and southern India (grouped under the name of the Dravidian Family) belong to this family or not is uncertain. The Japanese, the Corean, and other tongues of the peninsulas and islands of extreme northeastern Asia are claimed by some as belonging to the Tartaric Family; but this is very doubtful.

Southeastern Asiatic or Monosyllabic Family in China, and Farther India, and countries adjacent to these (including the Chinese, Siamese, Burmese, Annamese, etc.).

Malay-Polynesian or Oceanic Family, including the languages and dialects spoken in nearly all the islands of the Pacific and Indian oceans; but the Australian in Australia and Tasmania, and the Papuan or Negrito in New Guinea, part of Borneo and some other islands, have not been shown to belong to this family.

Hamitic Family, composed of the Egyptian, and its congeners, the Coptic, Galla, Berber, Hottentot (?), etc.

South-African (sometimes called Zingian) Family, filling Africa about the equator and south of it.

American Family, occupying with its many and greatly varying dialects the whole continent of North and South America, if they all do belong to the same family.

Besides these great families, there remain as yet unclassified the Caucasian group of languages (including the Georgian, Circassian, Lesghian, and Mitsjeghian idioms) in the mountain range of the Caucasus; the Etruscan in Northern Italy; and the ancient Iberian, once the prevailing language of the Spanish peninsula, and still spoken in the Pyrenees in the language called Basque (Biscayan or Euscarra).

EXPLANATORY NOTES.

Foreign words inserted in the vocabulary, but not yet anglicized, are printed with two bars before them; as, ‖ A-do'be, ‖ Bag'a-telle', ‖ Sol.

The hyphen in words which should be written or printed with a hyphen is indicated by a longer, heavier mark than that used in indicating syllabic division; as, E-lec'tro–mag-net'ic.

The figures following the respelling for pronunciation refer to sections of the Guide to Pronunciation, pp. vi.–xxxii. In the respelling for pronunciation, when successive words in the same column begin with one or more syllables which are pronounced alike, the common part is usually omitted after the first word. Words ending in simple suffixes, such as -bly, -ed (when not contracted), -ess, -est, -ing, -ish, -ive, -less, -ly, -ment, -ness, etc., are not usually respelt when the pronunciation of all but the suffix can be supplied from a preceding word. Otherwise they are respelt; as in the cases of Con'di-ment, Glad'ly, Gi-ron'dist, Spon'gi-ness, etc.

For plurals not given, see the Rules for Spelling, §§ 18–26, pp. xxxvi., xxxvii. For etymologies of prefixes and suffixes used without explanation in etymologies, see the prefixes and suffixes in the vocabulary, and also the list of Prefixes and Suffixes, pp. xlv.–li. For meanings of suffixes forming derivatives run on without definition see the same list, and also the suffixes in the vocabulary.

When instead of, or in addition to, a definition, there is a reference, introduced by See, to another word of the same meaning, the word referred to is the one usually preferred.

The use of deriv. of (= derivative of) in the etymologies implies the omission of one or more intermediate forms in the derivation.

In this edition the hyphen is less frequently used than in former editions. The practice of lexicographers, authors, and printers is so various in this matter, either as a matter of taste, or as a matter of convenience arising from the varying nature of the subject-matter, that in a multitude of instances it is hypercritical or whimsical to pronounce dogmatically that either the use or the omission of the hyphen is the only correct usage. The general principle followed in this work is to refrain from using the hyphen, (1) when the words have the same meaning in unconnected succession as when joined, and (2) when the compound may have the form of a continuous word without confusion or awkwardness to the eye. But this principle cannot be rigidly applied, because good usage, which must be respected, does not invariably conform to it.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A (named ā in English). 1. The first letter of the English and of many other alphabets; the different forms are descended from the old Latin A, which was borrowed from the Greek Alpha, of the same form, of Egyptian origin. This letter, in English, is used for several different vowel sounds. See Guide to Pronunciation, §§ 43–74. 2. (Mus.) The sixth tone in the model major scale (that in C), or the first tone in the minor scale, which is named after it the scale in A minor.

A (ȧ, emph. ā). 1. [AS. ān one. See ONE.] An adjective, commonly called the indefinite article, and equivalent to one or any, but less emphatic. It is placed before nouns of the singular number denoting an individual object, or a quality individualized, before collective nouns, and also before plural nouns when the adjective few or the phrase great many or good many is interposed. It is used for an, for the sake of euphony, before words beginning with a consonant sound [for exception of certain words beginning with h, see AN]. 2. [Originally the preposition a (an, on).] In each; to or for each; as, twenty leagues a day.

A (ȧ), prep. [See ON.] 1. In; on; at; by. [Obs.] 2. In process of; in the act of; into; to; — used (separately or joined by a hyphen) with verbal substantives in -ing. [Obsoles.] 3. [AS. of. See OF.] Of. [Obs.]

A-. A, as a prefix to English words, is derived from various sources. (1) It frequently signifies on or in (from an, a, forms of AS. on), denoting a state, as in *a*foot, on foot, *a*bed, *a*miss, *a*sleep. (2) AS. of off, from, as in *a*down. (3) AS. ā- (Goth. us-, ur-, Ger. er-), usually giving an intensive force, and sometimes the sense of away, on, back, as in *a*rise, *a*bide, *a*go. (4) Old English y- or i- (corrupted from the AS. inseparable particle ge-), which, as a prefix, made no essential addition to the meaning, as in *a*ware. (5) French à (L. ad to), as in *a*base, *a*chieve. (6) L. a, ab, abs, from, as in *a*vert. (7) Greek insep. prefix ἀ without, or privative, not, as in *a*byss, *a*theist; akin to E. un-.
